Silver Bloc Acts to Force Legislation; Holders Filed

Passage of Amended Dies Bill Is Favored at Conference.

Group Prepared For Showdown

Names of Bullion Buyers Will Be Submitted to Senate Today.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

As the Senate silver bloc yesterday took steps to strengthen its movement to force adoption of legislation requiring President Roosevelt give the white metal a more important place in the monetary sun, the Treasury prepared a list of several hundred persons holding quantities of silver bullion.

Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr., announced he would send the list to the Senate today in response to its resolution demanding to know the results of his recent survey of who was buying and holding silver. When Morgenthau completed this survey he said it indicated that not all advocates of silver legislation were disinterested."

This caused a flurry of protest on Capitol Hill and Morgenthau quickly stated he had not intended to indicate that any members of Congress were in a position to profit from legislation enhancing silver prices. But the Senate was not satisfied and demanded the list of names, along with the amounts held. It is expected the Senate will make the list public.

1,000 Names in List.

Due to the clerical task of tabulating the list of names, the quantities of silver held by each person and whether it was "spot silver" or silver futures, Morgenthau said he was sending the list piecemeal to the Senate. In all, he said, there are about 1,000 names. These will be sent to the Senate in two or three parts.

Earlier in the day about 20 "silver" Senators met informally to hear a report from the committee they sent to the White House Saturday and also to hear words of cheer and encouragement from several inflation advocates outside of Congress, such as Father Charles E. Coughlin, Detroit radio priest.

The gathering quickly turned into

Terror Spreads Over Madrid

Bullets and Bombs Menace Government; Cabinet Facing Crisis.

Madrid, April 23 (AP).—Bullets and bombs spread terror in Madrid today, menacing a government harassed by disorders and strikes in much of the nation.

Outbreaks which flared yesterday, inspired by a demonstration of 40,000 Catholic youths, members of the Popular Agrarian party, continued today. But the government, through Premier Alejandro Lerroux, contended the situation was in hand.

Government declaration of a state of alarm and enforcement of a recent public order law were reported likely.

One was that the cabinet would face a crisis tomorrow with the resignation of several ministers because of the failure to put into effect a law providing amnesty for several thousand political prisoners, approved by congress.

Three persons were dangerously wounded when a Popular Agrarian youth opened fire on a crowd of extremists surrounding an Agrarian's bus as they prepared to leave for their home in Valencia.

Police removed two unexploded bombs from the San Roman Church in the labor district. Police and assault guards patrolled all Madrid today.

Atlantic City, N. J., April 23 (AP). George Jessel and Norma Talmadge were married at the Hotel Ambassador here today by Mayor Harry Bachrach.

Arrangements for the ceremony were made by Enoch L. Johnson, Atlantic County Republican leader. Although Jessel and Miss Talmadge obtained a license at the city hall Thursday, nothing was known of the plans until today.

The ceremony was performed in Jessel's suite.

Mrs. Roosevelt Raps Schall in Factory Row

Denies Her Autograph on Furniture Brings Fancy Profits to Hyde Park Plant; Waits Vainly for Senator to Keep Appointment.

What amounted to a categorical denial of a statement by Senator Thomas B. Schall (Republican), Minnesota, concerning the Val-kill Furniture Shop at Hyde Park, N. Y., was made to newspaperwomen by Mrs. Roosevelt yesterday after she had waited in vain to see the Senator at the White House.

Reading the intimations of the Senator about the shop in which she had long been interested, Mrs. Roosevelt telephoned him yesterday morning and invited him to the White House, where she said she proposed to make to him the same contradiction she later gave the press.

When he failed to appear by 10:30 a. m., however, the First Lady went to her regular press conference in the auditorium of the Department of Commerce, read the Senator's statement and point by point gave answer to his charges.

Later Senator Schall said there was some misunderstanding about the time, since it would not have been possible for him to reach the White House from "10 miles out in Maryland" until noon.

Still later the Senator returned to the attack, issuing another statement to the effect "Gen. Johnson should be called in and the factory put on a code * * * if they can't make the factory of the President's wife earn a profit." To this he added:

"Mrs. Roosevelt is quoted as saying she has not made a cent of interest on the money she invested in the factory. We hope the radio company and the newspapers and the magazines she is writing for are at least paying for the pencils and paper she must consume in the undertaking."

Arriving late and out of breath for her meeting with the newspaperwomen, Mrs. Roosevelt perched on one of the long tables below the auditorium stage and announced that her tardiness at the press conference was due to waiting for the Senator to show up.

"I telephoned him at 9:15 and he

Japan Warns World on War Aids to China

Defender of Asian Peace, Tokyo Plenipotentiary Informs League.

The British Government yesterday, in a polite but firm note, reminded Japan of the latter nation's obligations under the Nine-Power Treaty guaranteeing the territorial integrity and sovereignty of China, according to the Associated Press.

Japan's stand as the "natural defender of the peace in "eastern Asia" was further clarified in an official statement issued last night in Geneva by the Japanese Consul General, Uchiro Yokoyama.

Geneva, April 23 (AP).—A doctrine of "Asia for Asiatics, under the leadership of Japan, acting in close collaboration with other Asiatic powers," was officially enunciated by the Tokyo government today through Consul General Uchiro Yokoyama.

In a statement issued as a warning to the world, he declared Japan will oppose various forms of foreign aid to China "under whatever guise," which may disturb the peace, because "Japan must fulfill her duty as an international defender of the peace in eastern Asia."

The pronouncement expressed a fear that "civil war leaders" or "partisans of the anti-Japanese movement" are seeking help through "various kinds of economic, financial and technical advice and actions from "third powers in order

Los Angeles, April 23 (AP).—Ken Murray, comedian of stage and screen, today obtained a divorce from Charlotte Doncourt—their private life name being Doncourt—on charges of cruelty.

Canal Zone Warlike As U. S. Fleet Passes

Balboa, Canal Zone, April 23 (AP).—Warlike activity gripped the 50 miles of the Panama Canal today as the United States Navy began a spectacular attempt to move its mighty fleet of 111 vessels from the Pacific to the Atlantic within 24 hours.

Forces of the United States Army guarded docks and locks, lending an additional military touch to the feverish scene. A rigid censorship was established.

Savant Urges New Theories Of Evolution

Academy of Sciences Is Told Telescope May Prove "Expansion."

In the recently molded 200-inch telescope reflector will be found the proof or disproof of the theory that the universe is expanding, Dr. Edwin Hubble, Carnegie Institute astronomer, told a distinguished group of scientists attending the annual meeting of the National Academy of Sciences last night.

Dr. Hubble's lecture, graphically describing the present known universe, ended a day's session which had heard Dr. Henry Fairfield Osborn, of the American Museum of Natural Science, urge that the old theories of evolution be thrown to the discard and a new approach made to the search for the cause of the origin of species.

The important factor which the great new telescope of the California Institute of Technology will solve, Dr. Hubble said, whether the so-called "red shift" seen in the spectrum of nebulae actually indicates that the observed nebulae are receding from the earth at apparent tremendous speeds.

"I believe the 200-inch telescope will definitely answer the question of the red shifts, whether or not they represent actual motions, and if they do represent motions—if the

Michigan U. Grad, 27 Others Sentenced in Finland Spy Plot

Abo, Finland, April 23 (AP).—Arvid W. Jacobson, 30-year-old University of Michigan graduate, was sentenced to five years at hard labor today for participating in far-flung espionage activities.

Mrs. Marie Louise Schul Martin, central figure of the 28 persons brought to trial, was sentenced to eight years at hard labor. Both lost their civil rights—Jacobson for 10 years and Mrs. Martin for 15 years.

The hight court, closing its hearings in the sensational case that has stirred Finland since the arrest of the suspects last fall, held it had proved that since 1928 the spy league, with Mrs. Martin as leader, had, through hired agents, been supplying some foreign government with information, plans, documents, photographs and charts concerning the Finnish defense forces.

The name of the government was not revealed today, but previous reports mentioned Russia and Germany, and linked the accused here with an alleged espionage syndicate in Paris, in connection with which Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gordon Switz, of New York and New Jersey, are held.

Vera Hambon, another prisoner, was given a two-year term at hard labor. The sentences of the others varied from three to six years. The trial, held in camera, lasted nine weeks.

Jacobson and his wife, Sally, were among the ten persons first arrested last October 27. The others subsequently were taken into custody and Mrs. Jacobson was released.

Authorities said that Mrs. Martin was a Briton carrying a Canadian passport and that she visited Russia by airplane shortly before her arrest. The group was alleged to have cooperated with a Finnish staff lieutenant believed by officials to have fled to Russia with military information.

Whitney Hits Lobby Attack Of Rayburn

Durable Goods Industry Committee Denies Charges Also.

House Leader Criticizes "Unfair" Fight Made on Mart Control.

By Robert C. Albright.

The New York Stock Exchange and the durable goods industries committee last night struck back at Chairman Sam Rayburn, of the House Interstate Commerce Committee, who yesterday charged an organized lobbying "campaign of misrepresentation and fright" against stock market control legislation.

President Richard Whitney, of the New York Stock Exchange, defended "the genuineness of the opposition to the bill." Chairman George H. Houston, of the durable goods industries committee, declaring Rayburn's charges "unwarranted," said industry will "quickly recognize the trail of the red herring."

At the same time, critical scrutiny of the securities act of 1933 spread to the American Federation of Labor. President William Green, holding labor is "naturally interested in developing credit facilities," undertook a study of the act, with a view to possible recommended changes.

Bill Modified Further.

Widespread business demand for modification of the act was reflected on Capitol Hill, where Chairman Duncan U. Fletcher of the Senate Banking Committee, conceded "we may have to go further than we intended" in amending the law. He said Federal Trade Commissioner James M. Landis is at work on proposed changes.

Rayburn's "lobbying" charges preceded a session at which his committee further modified the House draft of the Fletcher-Rayburn stock market control bill, by removing from the measure provisions for monthly reports to the Federal Trade Commission. The requirement had been broadly protested by industry. The committee plans to finish action on the bill today.

Earlier, Chairman Rayburn lashed out at the durable goods indus-

Flames Raze Newark Passenger Station

Newark, N. J., April 23 (AP).—Fire, apparently starting from a short circuit on a train pulling out for New York, today spread to the platforms and destroyed the train sheds of the Park Place Station of the Hudson & Manhattan Railroad.

Anti-Hitler Movie Banned in Chicago

Chicago, April 22 (AP).—Police today stopped showings of "Hitler's reign of terror," a movie purporting to depict conditions in Germany under the Nazi government.

A protest by Dr. R. L. Jaeger, German consul general in Chicago, to Mayor Edward J. Kelly brought rescinding of the permit for the film here. Jaeger said he acted on instructions from the German Embassy in Washington.

Spilling Dirt on Mrs. Harriman's Lawn Costs $850

It will cost $850 to remove the huge pile of yellow clay that was dumped in the yard of Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, a jury in District Supreme Court decided yesterday.

Mrs. Harriman, socially prominent and a high ranking Democrat, instituted suit against Raymond T. Baker, his wife, Mrs. Delphine Dodge Baker, and four others because, she said, when she returned from a trip abroad three years ago, she found her lawns at 1800 Ridge road northwest, covered with 4,300 cubic yards of clay.

Justice Proctor directed verdicts acquitting all but Baker and the James P. Maher Construction Co., which admittedly hauled the dirt from Baker's adjacent home to the Harriman grounds.

After debating an hour the jurors found that Baker was not responsible, and that the Maher company was liable to the extent of $850. Mrs. Harriman had asked $25,000 damages.

President Speeds New Laws as Dillinger Kills 2 More.

All U. S. Facilities Thrown Into Hunt

Keenan Hopes Gangster Won't Need Trial When Caught.

Hope that John Dillinger will be captured "under such circumstances that the Government will be spared the expense of a trial" was expressed yesterday by Assistant Attorney General Joseph B. Keenan.

This declaration came as all the resources of the Department of Justice investigation division were concentrated on the attempt to capture the desperado.

At the same time, President Roosevelt steeppd into the situation by urging Congress to rush the Government's anticrime bills. Following a conference with the President, Chairman Sumners of the House Judiciary Committee said his committee would take up the bills today.

The proposed measures make it a Federal offense to kill a Federal officer, give the Government jurisdiction over prosecution of fugitives who cross State lines, and generally strengthen the power of the Government over crimes committed by the use of firearms.

"They Don't Escape."

One Federal agent and one other man were killed in the attempt to capture Dillinger and his gang in northern Wisconsin Sunday night. Never has a criminal who has killed a Federal agent escaped. The Department of Justice is determined that Dillinger shall be no exception.

The Federal agent who was killed, W. Carter Baum, was a native of Washington. He was born here 29 years ago and was graduated from McKinley High School and George Washington University, where he received a degree of bachelor of laws. He was a member of the District and Virginia bars.

Baum is survived by his wife and two children. The widow was Mary E. Grose, daughter of the Rev. John A. Grose, of Laytonsville, Md. Baum entered the division of investigation as a special agent June 30, 1930, and served in the New York and Chicago districts. Prior to joining the division he practiced law in Washington. At the time of his death his home was in Chicago.

Dogs Thwart Agents.

An official version of the Dillinger escape in Wisconsin declared that Eugene Boisoneau, Civilian Conservation Corps representative, who was killed, and his two companions, who were wounded, were hit by bullets fired in the battle beteen Department of Justice agents and the Dillinger gang. Barking dogs, the statement said, warned

Woman Found Hurt On Theater Floor

Unable to Tell How She Received Broken Ribs.

Mysteriously injured and found unconscious on the floor of a rest room of a Ninth street theater yesterday, Miss Thelma Vincent, 26, of the 400 block of Pennsylvania avenue northwest, was taken to Emergency Hospital with a possible fractured skull, several fractured ribs, internal injuries and a fractured leg.

She was unable to tell police how she was hurt. Physicians reported her right leg had been fractured some time ago, and in some matter apparently had been rebroken. Police said she was treated also for alcoholism. She was taken to Gallinger Hospital for observation.

Investigators believed Miss Vincent might have received the injuries in a fall. At a downtown hotel, where she was registered, it was reported she had not been in her room for several days.

Pension Bill Vote Blocked By Blanton

House Filibuster Delays Old Age Measure Three Weeks.

House action on the District old age pension bill was blocked yesterday by a one-man filibuster by Representative Blanton (Democrat), Texas, who last Thursday defeated every effort to liberalize the District supply bill.

Over the objection of Chairman Norton and other members of the House District Committee, Blanton resorted to several quorum calls, one of which led to a roll call vote, and insisted on unlimited general debate instead of the one-hour debate asked by the chairman.

As a result the bill can not be voted on for three weeks, or until

Miss Burroughs Admits to Many "Errors" on Stand.

By Frank Getty.

Repeated "errors" in her reports to Congress, involving omission of Bishop James Cannon, jr.'s, name in conection with loans to the "Headquarters Committee, Anti-Smith Democrats," were admitted by Miss Ada Burroughs on the witness stand yesterday.

Composed and seemingly indifferent, the bishop's former secretary declared she just couldn't recall why she left out his name in rendering her official accounts as treasurer of Hoover's Southern campaign against Al Smith in 1928.

"After all these years," Miss Burroughs said repeatedly, there was much she couldn't remember. She was positive she never had con-

Autoists' and Merchants' Vote To Decide on Parking Ban

Washington motorists and merchants pondered parking questions yesterday, as Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer announced he would decide by popular vote future action on the proposal to prohibit overnight parking on the Capital's streets.

Forty merchants also filed protests with the Washington Board of Trade objecting to the all-day parking ban on three downtown streets.

Van Duzer's plan calls for questionnaires to be submitted to citizens' associations. He declared he had an "open mind" on the subject and first wished to learn reactions of District motorists.

From a few comments, Van Duzer said yesterday the majority seemed in favor of the all-night parking abolition.

Meanwhile, business men on F, G and Seventh streets, where the parking prohibition is in effect, in replying to a questionnaire were nearly agreed in condemning the ban as "harmful to business and discouraging to shopping in the central district."

At a joint meeting of representatives of Washington's major trade organizations tomorrow at 10 a. m. at Board of Trade headquarters, the replies to the questionnaires will be considered. The meeting will be attended by members of the Board of Trade, Merchants and Manufacturers Association, Chamber of Commerce and Seventh Street Business Men's Association.

U.S. Agent Slain as Band Blazes Way Out of Lake Resort.

CCC Man Slain, Constable Dying

(Copyright, 1934, Associated Press.)

Mercer, Wis., April 23.—John Dillinger, with hate in his heart and murder on his trigger finger, was somewhere in the wilderness of northern Wisconsin tonight, a grim posse hard on his heels after he had blazed his way out of a police trap, leaving two dead and four wounded.

He had vanished out of a beleaguered Wisconsin resort last night, with his quick-shooting first lieutenant, John Hamilton, and five of his outlaw band, after he had taken possession of the place and mounted a machine gun to repel invaders.

Tonight, this north woods section was in the grip of a blizzard, with hard-driving snow hampering the Government men and local officers in their relentless pursuit of the arch criminal of the times.

Gang Split.

Apparently the Dillinger gang split, after the deadly gun battle, but officials felt sure, in spite of conflicting reports from various sections, that Dillinger was in this territory, and there was no let-up in the search for the outlaw whose exploits have become fabled.

Hours later, detectives at a St. Paul suburb traded fusillades of rifle fire with a speeding automobile carrying three men, but again they eluded pursuit.

The latest victims of the Dillinger hunt were:

W. Carter Baum, Federal agent from Chicago, shot dead by an outlaw.

Eugene Boisoneau, of Mellen, Wis., killed, mistakenly, by the officers.

Constable Dying.

Carl C. Christensen, constable, of Spider Lake, Wis., wounded probably fatally by Baum's assassin.

Colored Man Slain in Court

Nephew of Victim Shoots Accused to Death Before Crowd.

Crockett, Tex., April 23 (AP).—Ben Ellis today shot to death in a crowded courtroom a colored man accused of slaying his uncle, J. M. Ellis, white merchant.

A jury was being selected to try the colored man, Frank Brisby, for murder. Ellis, 24, rose in his seat, drew a pistol and fired one shot.

Then he calmly lit a cigarette, handed the pistol to the sheriff, and waited for the commotion to cease.

District Judge Ben F. Dent ordered the courtroom cleared. Friends crowded around Ellis and when his bond was fixed at $2,500, the sum was quickly posted and he was released.

The bullet which killed Brisby narrowly missed State Senator Nat Patton, defense attorney. Witnesses said the shot was fired at a range of about 5 feet. Ellis was seated on the front row of the courtroom. He gave no warning before he fired.

Sentiment against Brisby had been strong since the Ellis killing two weeks ago. He was kept under close guard. A machine gun was mounted at the jail.

Just before start of the trial two pistols were taken from Garland Ellis, father of Ben Ellis and brother of J. M. Ellis.

J. M. Ellis was killed about noon April 7 when he went to a colored home on a plantation 21 miles west of Crockett to collect a $3 debt. A colored man stood in the doorway of the house and shot him once with a shotgun loaded with buckshot.

It was later contended that all hold up their hands.
those who attended the meeting, with one or two exceptions, favored passage of the amended Dies bill. This would seem to indicate that the silver bloc in Congress stands ready to face a showdown with President Roosevelt over the passage of mandatory silver legislation.

Split Developing.

But it also became apparent that a split is developing in the silver bloc and that a minority of that group does not wish to battle with Mr. Roosevelt, some because they like to go along with the President and the others because they feel that half a loaf is better than none and that it is better to concentrate on the kind of permissive legislation acceptable to the President.

Senator Key Pittman (Democrat), Nevada, is one of those taking the view that it is futile to insist on mandatory legislation when it is clear it would be vetoed by the President.

But on the other side are such dynamic figures as Senators William E. Borah (Republican), Idaho, and Elmer Thomas (Democrat), Oklahoma, the latter the successful leader of the Senate inflation movement. Thomas now takes the position that "if mandatory legislation is not passed, none should be approved."

The Senate silver group last night joined with a number of House silver advocates and attended a private dinner at the Willard Hotel to discuss ways and means of continuing the fight with a group of inflation advocates outside of Congress. The purpose of this meeting also apparently was to stiffen up the silver leaders to buck the White House opposition to mandatory legislation.

6,000 Nurses Open National Session Here

Mrs. Roosevelt Will Be Speaker Today at Conference.

"The leveling of wealth going on before our eyes" means less private support for public health services in the future, Sophie C. Nelson, president of the National Association for Public Health Nursing, told 6,000 nurses assembled at the Washington Auditorium last night for their biennial convention.

Miss Nelson declared that in the future public health agencies would draw their revenue more and more from taxation, rather than charity. "An inevitable result of the transference of social services from private to public auspices will be that a larger proportion of the population must, of necessity, be reached," she went on, "for it will no longer be necessary to give intensive nursing care to only a limited group. All must be served."

Miss Nelson's address was the high point in the opening day of the joint convention, which will continue until Friday. Today, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt will speak at the session beginning at 9:45 a. m., on the subject, "What Does the Public Expect From Nursing?"

Leveling of Wealth.

"We have reached the stage in our mental development where we are wholly certain of very little," said Miss Nelson, "but of this we can be sure—that as society progresses there is likely to be a leveling of wealth. There will probably be less enormous wealth in the hands of a few individuals, and we can only hope that more of the country's income will find its way to those who are now too poor to pay for social services. More and more taxes are being placed on incomes, estates and corporations.

"Private funds in the future will be devoted more and more to experimenting in new fields of endeavor and to research projects, rather than to meeting the immediate community needs. People generally must accept the notion nurses are as properly agents of the state as are, for example, school teachers."

Miss Nelson predicted that there probably will be a trend away from free-lance nursing toward some community plan. "Instead of concentrating on bedside care," she said, "the nurse of the future will teach the patient to care for himself."

Cites United States Advantage.

Another speaker, Mlle. Lucie Odier, a member of the International Red Cross Comite of Geneva, told the assembled nurses that what she has seen since her arrival in the United States made her realize "better than before," how far in advance you are in the nursing point of view, in comparison with most of the countries of the world. But in spite of this difference," she said, "the nurses of all nations are banded together by a multitude of common interests. They are sisters by their devotedness and by their attachment to this beautiful profession."

The convention, which is a joint effort of the American Nurses Association, the National League of Nursing Education and the National Organization of Public Health Nursing, spent most of its opening day in business sessions at scattered points throughout the city. The Nurses Association, whose headquarters are at the Mayflower Hotel, met in closed business session at the Auditorium yesterday afternoon, with Miss Elnora E. Thomson, association president, conducting the meeting.

After a morning musiness meeting presided over by Miss Nelson, the N. O. P. H. N. divided up to attend two luncheons. At one, held at the Washington Hotel, the Joint Vocational Service Advisory Council met under the leadership of Marion W. Sheahan, director of the division of public health nursing, of the New York Department of Health at Albany.

Second Luncheon.

Another luncheon and business meeting of the board and committee members section was held in the Hall of Nations of the Washington Hotel, with Mrs. C. E. A. Winslow, president of the Visiting Nurse Association of New Haven, Conn., presiding. At the latter Mrs. Whitman Cross, honorary president of the Instructive Visiting Nurse Society of Washington, delivered greetings to the delegates and Mrs. Arch Trawick, of the Tenessee Department of Health, spoke on: "Lay Participation in a State Program."

In the afternoon there were round tables for board and committee members. The subjects discussed included "Community Relationships," which was led by Mrs. H. S. Downing, chairman of the Millbrook Visiting Nurse Committee; "volunteer programs," led by Mrs. George Carpenter, jr., chairman of the municipal nursing committee of the St. Louis Department of Public Welware.

At 5:30 the Instructive Visiting Nurse Society was hostess to board and committee members at a tea held in the society's headquarters in the Albbe Building.

Hostesses at Session.

Miss Effie J. Taylor, president of the National League of Nursing Education, called a business session to order at 9:15 a. m. in the large ballroom of the Willard Hotel, which lasted throughout the morning. Hostesses for the league were the District and Maryland chapters of the organization, as well as the education section of the Graduate Nurses Association of Virginia, of which Miss Adelaide A. Mayo is chairman.

Last night's joint session was held in the Washington Auditorium, with all groups attending. Miss Thomson, who presided, delivered an address on the activities of the organization and its cooperation with the NRA and the Federal Emergency Relief Administration.

The United States Marine Band, under the direction of Capt. Taylor Branson, played a half-dozen selections, after which the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Episcopal Bishop of Washington, delivered the invocation. Miss J. Beatrice Bowman, president of the Graduate Nurses Association of the District, then gave a brief address of welcome to the delegates and extended the hospitality of the city.

Other Speakers.

Other speeches followed, including those of Miss Taylor and Miss Nelson. Clara D. Noyes, director of the American Red Cross Nursing Service, spoke briefly on the work done by the Red Cross during the war. She revealed that it had distributed food made from 85,000,000 bushels of wheat, as well as garments and bedding from 844,000 bales of cotton. The heaviest burden on the Red Cross had come from expenses of public health nurses in rural communities, Miss Noyes declared. She stated that there were 21,067 instructors teaching home hygiene throughout the country at the present time.

The awarding of the Walter Burns Saunders Memorial Medal concluded the program. The presentation was made by Dr. Nathaniel Wales Faxon, president of the American Hospital Association.

The medal is regarded as the greatest honor a graduate nurse can receive from her profession. The recipient is chosen on the basis of "having given to the profession or to the public some outstanding contribution, either in personal service or in the discovery of some nursing technique that may be to the advantage of the patient and of the profession."

Today's Program.

Today's program is featured by the address of Mrs. Roosevelt this morning. C. Rufus Rorem, associate for medical service of the Julius Rosenwald Fund in Chicago, will follow Mrs. Roosevelt on the program with a talk on "What Can the Public Do to Insure Good Nursing Service?"

During the day there will be group meetings throughout the city. At 11:15 the private duty section of the A. N. A. will assemble in the auditorium under the chairmanship of Miss Meda Marsh, of Okmulgee, Okla. The government nursing section will have a session at the ballroom of the Mayflower, presided over by Mrs. Mary A. Hickey, of Washington. Miss Netta Ford, of York, Pa., will lead the legislative section meeting in the United States Chamber of Commerce at which Elizabeth Burgess, of Teachers College, Columbia University, will talk on "What Are the Essentials of a Good Nurse Practice Act?"

In the garden room of the Mayflower, the mental hygiene section will listen to a talk on "Ward Teaching in Mental Hospitals," given by Francis Thielbar, of the Butler Hospital in Providence, R. I. Miss May Kennedy, of New York, will preside at this meeting. The A. N. A. directors and the National and State private duty sections then will lunch at the Mayflower. In the afternoon the section meetings will continue. Sister Olivia, director of nursing education of Catholic University, will speak on "Tradition or Progress?" at the Washington Auditorium. Other speeches at this meeting include "The Eight-Hour Day for Private Daily Nurses," by Mary Lee Mitchell, of St. Louis, and "Research and Study Development," by Mary M. Roberts, editor of the American Journal of Nursing.

Government Section.

At the Government section in the Mayflower, Chloe Owings, assistant director of the Women's Work Division of FERA will talk on "What the New Deal Has Done for Professional Women." Miss Mary Anderson, director of the Women's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor, will take as her subject: "What the New Deal Has Done for Women in Industry."

The legislative section will hear Clara Quereau, secretary of the New York State Board of Nurse Examiners, talk on "Uniformity of Laws With Higher Standards." Esther Entriken, general secretary of the Pennsylvania State Nurses Association, will discuss "Preparation for and Methods of Securing Enactment of Nurse Practice Act," and Mary Stewart Blair, of Harrisburg, Pa., will take the subject of "Legislation and Education."

The N.O.P.H.N. will hold a general session at 11:15 this morning in the First Congregational Church, with Miss Nelson presiding. Surgeon General Hugh S. Cumming, of the United States Public Health Service, will deliver an address on "New Developments in Public Health," and Joanna C. Colcord, of the Russell Sage Foundation, will tell of "New Developments in Social Work."

There will be a closed luncheon, with entertainment, at the Washington for staff and rural nurses. Another luncheon for nurses interested in the preparation of monthly reports for the registration of social statistics, will be held at the Y. W. C. A. At the latter Miss Louise Tattershall, of the Children's Bureau, will lead the discussion.

General Session.

Another general session in the Washington Auditorium will take place after lunch, with Miss Marion Howell, dean of the School of Nursing of Western Reserve University, presiding. Katherine Tucker, general director of the N. O. P. H. N., will discuss "Public Health Nursing Today." From 4 to 5:30 there will be round tables.

Mrs. Roosevelt Flays Schall's Plant Charges

Denies Her Autograph on Furniture Brings Fancy Prices.

agreed to come at 10:30 and I waited for him until about 11," Mrs. Roosevelt asserted, adding "I feel he had a good reason why he could not come, but I regret saying what I am about to say without saying it to him first. I am not on the floor of the Senate, and I do not have Senatorial immunity."

The Schall statement to which she referred, published Monday, spoke of "Mrs. Roosevelt's attempt to build a furniture factory at Reedsville, W. Va., with $25,000,000 of the taxpayers' money," and went on to declare that prices for Valkili furniture are five times those of other shops because the Roosevelt name is autographed on it.

Answers Criticisms.

Hotels "are being besought by furniture salesmen to install these suites and call them the 'Roosevelt suite,'" he asserted, continuing: "If the profit on these suites is only $1,000 each and through super-salesmanship Mrs. Roosevelt only sells 1,000 hotels this year, certainly the Hyde Park plant will not be able to supply the demand." * * *"

To all this, Mrs. Roosevelt replied:

That "it was never intended by the Government to spend $25,000,000 on any factory," that the Reedsville project, to employ from 125 to 200 people, could hardly be called a furniture factory since it was to make postoffice boxes.

That the Hyde Park plant, financed by herself and three other associates long before the election of President Roosevelt, has never paid salaries, much less returned a profit, and that its yearly deficit is met by the four women.

That the Roosevelt autograph is used only by request after purchase, for which no charge is made; and, finally, that the company employs no salesmen nor has ever sold furniture to hotels.

Answers Objections.

Objections to the Reedsville project, Mrs. Roosevelt said, "came from a representative of the district in which the Keyless lock factory, which makes locks for postoffice boxes, is located, and also from factories that make postoffice boxes in Connecticut and other places." Reports that it was to be a furniture factory she termed "entirely untruthful."

"It is apparent," she continued, "that a small factory such as the one at Reedsville could not at any time supply the demand for third and fourth class postoffices. But such a factory could be a measuring rod of prices charged by other factories. Such a factory would be an extremely inconvenient one for some interests to have in operation.

"My factory at Hyde Park turns out hand-made furniture. Had Senator Schall known anything about furniture he would have discovered why prices were higher for hand-made furniture. In the first place, it was started as an experiment to see if a very small factory could be made to pay in a small rural community. The idea was to teach the boys so they would remain in the community.

Never Received Profit.

"The four women who went into the project—myself, Miss Nancy Cook, Mrs. Daniel O'Day and Miss Marion Dickerman—never received one cent of interest on our investment. During the depression we managed to keep eight married men at work at $24 a week."

Declaring that 22 people would be the plant's maximum, Mrs. Roosevelt said the shop sold to department stores, adding, "The prices charged by the department stores have nothing to do with me. We never sold furniture to any hotel although we would be willing to do so. But it happens we have no salesmen; we can not afford them."

Autograph Stamped.

Mrs. Roosevelt explained that the factory solicits sales by circulars and that purchases are also made either by visits to the plant or at two deals a year at her home. Concerning her autograph, she said:

"Because people have asked for my name long before my husband became President, we have had a stamp made with my autograph to put on the furniture when it is requested. No charge is made for the autograph. Our prices are fixed every six months, according to labor costs, and so forth."

Senator Schall, who made Mrs. Roosevelt's reply the occasion for two more statements during the day, one of them attacking the Administration tariff bill, said it was his understanding he was to have seen Mrs. Roosevelt "tomorrow." He indicated he would not, however, by adding, "I don't see any necessity now."

Rayburn Lobby Charges Draw Whitney's Fire

Durable Goods Industry Committee Denies Claims Also.

tries committee, which yesterday published a statement condemning restrictive features of the securities act and the Fletcher-Rayburn bill.

Lobbying Charges.

He said George H. Mead, Dayton, Ohio, paper manufacturer, representing the industrial committee, "brought up some amendments to the stock exchange bill as the findings of this group."

"It turned out," Rayburn continued, "that we already had received them two or three days before from Mr. Whitney and Mr. Redmond (president and general counsel, respectively, of the New York Stock Exchange.) They were practically identical.

"Everybody knows," he went on, "that the town is full of lobbyists. They tried to get every group in the country to join in this campaign of fright and misrepresentation against this legislation."

Asked to whom he was referring, he said:

"These people are working in the NRA—this durable goods crowd.

Stresses Power.

"There is an organized campaign of propaganda, and this group has used all of the business men it can to pull their chestnuts out of the fire. They have used every little broker and every little clerk in their offices and have tried to frighten them. They have tried to frighten every corporation in the country.

"It is the most powerful lobby ever organized against any bill which ever came up in Congress."

From Recovery Administration headquarters, Administrator Hugh S. Johnson issued an immediate denial that the durable goods industries committee is part of NRA, or reflects policies or opinions of the NRA.

"It is purely an advisory committee, representing the views of a particular group of interests in some respects adversely to other groups under the administration of NRA."

A similar position was taken by Chairman Houston, of the durable goods industries committee, who pointed out, however, that the group was organized at the suggestion of Gen. Johnson. He said the organization acts on its own responsibility and without the approval of NRA.

He declared attempts are being made "to becloud the issues involved in this proposed legislation and to discredit industry in its efforts to stimulate reemployment and recovery."

Cites Industry's Interest.

"The attempts of Chairman Rayburn to attribute industry's position on this legislation to propaganda from the stock exchange groups is wholly unwarranted," he said. "Industry's interest in this legislation is more vital, if possible, than that of the stock exchange itself and its viewpoint has been reached as a result of its own investigation and analysis.

"At no time has this committee been approached by representatives of the securities exchange group, or representatives of Morgan & Co., or anyone else in an effort to influence its judgment in this matter.

"Efforts to distract attention from the serious consequences to industry of the restrictive stock exchange regulation bills as now drafted will not be successful. Industry will quickly recognize the trail of the red herring and will continue to impress its viewpoint upon those responsible until adequate recognition has been obtained."

Britain Urges Japan to Define Stand on China

Note Seeks Clarification of Objections Raised Against Assistance.

London, April 23 (AP).—The House of Commons learned today that the British government has sent a "friendly communication" to Tokyo asking a clarification of objections a Japanese foreign office spokesman made last week to financial assistance given China.

Sir John Simon, the foreign secretary, informed the legislators he had received from the British Ambassador in Tokyo the text of an "informal statement by a Japanese spokesman," but had no notice from the Japanese government of an intention to redefine its Far Eastern policy or to disapprove foreign help to China.

The request for an explanation of how Japan views British assistance to China, Sir John said, "was a friendly communication with the Japanese government."

The Japanese spokesman's statement—described in other capitals as "an attempt to establish a protectorate over China"—appeared to be "inspired by the apprehension of certain dangers to the peace and good relations between China and Japan or the integrity of China, which might follow from certain actions by other powers and China," the foreign secretary declared.

He said further that Britain seeks to avoid these dangers.

On the other hand, he added, "the general character of the statement and certain details in it, such as the reference to objections to financial assistance to China, has made me think it is necessary to communicate with the Japanese government."

He was asked for further details of the note and about the possibility of communicating with other signatories, including the United States, of the 1922 nine-power Chinese treaty, but said, "I think it would be wiser to await the result of the communication I have made before I make a further statement."

"So John's Safe?" Dillinger's Father Bows in Sorrow

Mooresville, Ind., April 23 (AP).—"So John is safe, is he?" remarked John W. Dillinger, father of the Hoosier desperado, when told of the gunfight in northern Wisconsin Sunday night.

The elder Dillinger, plainly showing the strain he has undergone in the last few months, then asked if it were true a Federal officer had been killed in the skirmish. On receiving an affirmative answer, the 69-year-old father shook his head sadly and gazed down at the plow.

Whenever the younger Dillinger engages in a new episode, the father always asks: "Is John safe?" With that question answered, the old man becomes noncommittal.

New West Reveals Tale From Old West

Mariposa, Calif. (U.P.).—The Old West still lives. If you don't believe it, just ask Walter McNally, cattleman of Bootjack, in the heart of the famous Mother Lode region.

McNally told of one of his cow hands attempting to shoot a steer for ranch rations. He missed his aim and the shot angered the beast, which, scattering children who were playing nearby, raced away.

Realizing the mad animal's menace, McNally said, he gave chase on his fastest horse, pursuing the steer for miles. When finally he located the animal his horse was weary, McNally related, and before he could fire his high powered rifle the animal charged. Unable to shoot, McNally fled, finally jumping a ditch as a last resort. The steer also tried, but fell short and broke its neck.

McNally brought the animal in late at night.

'Dud' Bomb Proves To Be Real Thing

Cincinnati (U.P.).—A tear gas bomb a University of Cincinnati student received as a souvenir several years ago from a girl acquaintance with the understanding that it was a "dud" from the World War, proved to be "the real thing" here.

Joseph Kalavoda, owner of the bomb, was cleaning his trunk, where the "dud" was stored. Robert Hawley, a fraternity brother, asked permission to examine it. He pulled out the fuse. The "dud" exploded. Neither student was injured.

Californian Sues for $50,000 Walk in Nude

Merced, Calif. (U.P.).—Paul E. Peterson, of Cressey, sought $50,000 in court as damages due him for a midnight jaunt in the nude on Merced streets last October.

Peterson named as defendants medical attendants and a physician refained to treat him at a local hospital. Under effects of a drug they gave him for a stomach ailment, he alleged, he wandered from the hospital, fell through a glass door and was exposed to the chill night air without clothing.

Dillinger's Home and His Accomplices of Later Life

Associated Press Photos.

Pictures of the quiet town of John Dillinger's boyhood furnish a contrast to accounts of the notorious bandit's later life. Main street of Mooresville, Ind., on the outskirts of which he grew up, is pictured at upper left. At top, right, is his childhood home, where he had Sunday dinner April 8. Homer Van Meter, alias Homer Jackson, believed to have been with Dillinger when the gang shot its way out of ambuscade Sunday in northern Wisconsin, is pictured at lower left. John W. Dillinger, father, is seen directly above. The picture was taken at the farm home just after a petition seeking amnesty had been circulated in the home town. At extreme right is John Hamilton, the killer's right-hand man.

Guns at Back, Captive Helps Dillinger Flee

Called to Go for Doctor, He's Forced to Drive Killers Away.

By Robert Johnson.

Park Falls, Wis., April 23 (AP). Being aroused from a sound sleep and forced at the point of pistols to act as chauffeur for John Dillinger and two of his outlaw pals is an experience that doesn't happen often in the life of a peaceful small town carpenter—"And I will be just as happy if it never occurs to me again."

I live at Mitchell's Resort, near Manitowish, Wis. Last night about 10 o'clock Dillinger and his two companions came to my cottage and hollered to wake me up.

"What do you want?" I yelled down.

"Mrs. Mitchell (the wife of the resort owner) is sick and needs a doctor right away," they said. "We want you to get your car out and drive after a doctor."

Steps Out to Face Guns.

Well, I didn't suspect anything, so I dressed—just put on my everyday working clothes and my bedroom slippers—and went out.

There stood three men facing me with guns. I don't know much about those guns, but two of them were revolvers and one was a sawed-off shotgun or probably one of those machine guns.

"Get your car and drive us," they said sticking their guns into me.

"I only got a little coupe, a 1930 model. Two of them got in the seat with me and the other got in the rumble seat. I saw the 'Mrs.' looking out the window when I drove off, but I guess she didn't know what was happening."

"Now, mind your own business and drive as we tell you and everything will be all right," they said. They told me to drive as fast as I could make her go.

Kept Weapons on Him.

"They kept those guns against me all the time and made me travel the side roads. I was running low on gas, so they made me stop at a station—I think is was Springfield. The place was closed, but one of the men got out and rapped on the door.

"When the attendant came out they ordered gas and oil and I couldn't say a word, for there was a pistol against my ribs.

"Then we got going again. They seemed to know the roads and told me to stop and get out. They said 'so long,' and drove away. I walked about an hour until I came to the Pixley Power Station, about 10 miles south of Park Falls, and then phoned for help."

Burglar Gives Coed Cigarette Lighter

Salt Lake City, Utah (U.P.).—Miss Eileen Schultz, University of Utah coed, has a new cigarette lighter. A burglar broke into the sorority where she lives. Investigating, she bumped into him in the dark hallway upstairs.

"Pardon me, miss," said the burglar, bowing and tipping his hat, "would you be so kind as to give this to the house mother?" He handed her the lighter and fled.

Woods Posse Trails Dillinger After 2 More Are Slain, 4 Shot wounded while riding with Boisoneau.

John Morris, Civilian Conservation camp officer, shot three times while riding with Boisoneau.

J. C. Newman, Federal agent, slightly wounded.

A tip telephoned to the Chicago Bureau of Investigation of the Justice Department had brought the Government men swooping down upon the timberland retreat which the Dillinger mob had taken over by force last Friday.

There were seven of his band, including Hamilton, escaped convict; Tom Carroll, St. Paul bank robber; Homer Van Meter, several others unidentified and three girls.

Emil Wanatka, proprietor of the Little Bohemia resort on Spider Lake, recognized Dillinger when the gang arrived and registered, but "why should I try to take him?" he remarked. "I played cards with him every day. Say, he had a roll of money big enough to choke a cow."

Wanatka said he and his two employes were virtual prisoners. A machine gun was installed on the roof. Someone was always on guard.

The Federal men, reinforced with local officers, began surrounding the resort Sunday night.

About 10 p. m., three men, having regaled themselves with beer, walked out of the Little Bohemia and stepped into their automobile. The waiting officers commanded them to halt. They failed to hear the order because, they said, the radio in their car was on.

Watchdogs began barking. The machine gun on the roof let loose a deadly blast. The officers fired back, and in the cross-fire Boisoneau, one of the trio who had stopped in for drinks, was killed; Morris wounded, and Hoffman hurt as he fled into the woods. He was captured and taken with the others to a hospital at Ironwood, Mich., 35 miles north.

Gang Flees, Leaving Girls.

At the first shot, Dillinger and the rest had dived through a rear window and raced away through the woods, leaving their girls behind them.

The fugitives split up in the darkness. One of them reached a nearby resort just ahead of a group of officers hurrying to a telephone to give the alarm.

Walking up to Alvin Turner, the roadhouse owner, he demanded:

"Get me a car."

Turner had no time to reply before the lights of a car showed up outside.

The gunner, unlimbering his machine gun, ran out and shouted: "Who's that?"

The Federal officers identified themselves.

A stream of lead suddenly poured from the machine gun into the oncoming automobile. Baum was killed, Newman wounded and Christensen fell desperately hurt with five bullet wounds in his body. The killer sped away.

Three Cars Stolen.

Three automobiles in the vicinity were stolen during the night. The gravel roads of this region, pitted and soft from the rigors of a hard winter and a mushy spring, seemed to defy an escape so nearly perfect, but the desperadoes were always a step ahead of their pursuers.

The country is familiar enough to Dillinger, for it was here in the Lac du Flambeau region that he met Evelyn Frechette, the Indian girl who was with him when he fought his way out of a cordon of Federal officers at St. Paul and who was caught a week ago at Chicago.

Little Bohemia was kept under surveillance last night, at dawn the officers crept to the door, forced it open and hurled tear gas bombs inside. The three deserted girls ran out, to be whisked off to jail at Eagle River, 50 miles away.

Well schooled in the ways of the hunted, they stubbornly refused to tell their identities, kept their faces concealed, and when locked away for safe keeping merely asked for a deck of cards and chatted nonchalantly of nothing in particular.

Carry Heavy "Rolls."

They had fat rolls of bills, two wore gaudy pajamas scarcely in keeping with North Woods camping or county jail cells. The third wore a green riding habit, with knee boots.

The fugitives were believed to have sped away from Little Bohemia and nearby resorts in two automobiles, a Ford sedan and a coupe. License numbers were broadcast; sheriffs, police and Federal operatives patrolled every road in this region of Wisconsin, a heavily timbered, sparsely settled country dotted with lakes but traversed by few highways.

At noon, alert police at St. Paul, 230 miles southwest of here, spotted a Ford coupe bearing one of the Wisconsin licenses the Dillinger gang was using. A deputy sheriff tried to halt the car. The three men riding in it fired at him and sped on. A score of shots were exchanged.

Definite evidence that one of the mobsters was wounded, probably in the back, was seen in the blood found on the seat of the coupe, which was abandoned later.

For hours after the siege of Little Bohemia the resort was cut off from outside communications. Dillinger had torn out the telephone wires as he fled. In his haste to escape with his life—and few believe now that he will ever be caught alive—he had left behind his luggage, including gaudy pajamas, silk shirts and undergarments.

Three of the fugitives made their getaway in a car taken from Robert Johnson, a farmer living 2 miles from Wanatka's resort. Wakening him, they forced Johnson to drive them to Park Falls, 40 miles west, then pushed him out of the car and drove on. This may have been the car abandoned later at St. Paul.

"I'm Not Bad," Says Dillinger, Seeking Help

Forces Captive to Find Car for Escape From Trap.

By E. J. Mitchell,
(Proprietor of Mitchell's Resort, Manitowish, Wis.);

Manitowish, Wis., April 23 (AP).—I spent 20 minutes with John Dillinger and two of his gang last night. Dillinger rapped at my door a little before 10 o'clock and when I opened it he entered, pointing an automatic at me. Directly back of him was a tall, dark-complexioned man carrying a machine gun. Outside there was another man rather stockily built. He had a sawed-off shotgun.

"I'm Dillinger," the man with the automatic said. "I presume you have read a lot of things about me in the papers all winter."

My wife responded, "We certainly did. We read every day to see if they had caught Dillinger."

Dillinger talked very calmly.

"'I'm not such a bad man as a lot of people think,' he said. 'I'm not going to hurt you. I only want a car to get away with.'

"I told him we had a Ford which had not been running all winter. Just then my wife spoke up and said that we were going to buy a new car, but she guessed we were lucky we didn't.

"I told Dillinger my man, Eric Tobehn, had a truck. Then Dillinger said 'We'll try that.' He went over to the telephone and pulled the wires. This caused a short circuit, blowing out the lines serving the resort. We were all ordered outside. I protested that my wife had been sick and asked to get a blanket for her. Dillinger said, 'No! No;' and then he went and got a blanket and put it around my wife, saying, 'Here you are mother.'

"Outside, Eric tried to get his car started, but he couldn't.

"Dillinger then saw a coupe which belonged to Robert Johnson and we had to go over to Johnson's cabin and awaken him and his wife. They were ordered to come along and Johnson got his car started. The three men jumped in, one of them in the rumble seat and Dillinger and another man sitting beside Johnson. Johnson was then ordered to drive away."

War on Crime Given New Life By Roosevelt

Laws Speeded on Word of 2 More Killings by Dillinger Gang.

Dillinger and his companions of the approach of the officers and prevented their capture.

The statement, issued by J. Edgar Hoover, head of the Division of Investigation, said that as officers approached the Wisconsin inn dogs barked, giving warning of their approach. At the same time, it said, three men left the place and entered an automobile. It said the officers ordered them to stop and they failed to do so, whereupon the officers fired at their tires. The shots were answered by a fusillade of machine-gun bullets from the inn. In the ensuing fighting, the three CCC men were shot.

When the firing died down, Baum, J. C. Newman, another Federal agent, and Carl C. Christensen, a constable, left the scene and approached a nearby farm house to use a telephone to call other agents. As they approached the house they were met by a man who asked them who they were. When told they were Federal agents, the men opened fire, killing Baum and wounding Christensen and Newman. Christensen is expected to die.

Four "Most Dangerous."

The four desperadoes, Dillinger, Tom Carroll, Homer Van Meter and John Hamilton, are considered the country's most dangerous criminals. Department of Justice officials have little expectation of taking any of the four alive. Van Meter, 29 years old, began his criminal record in 1923, when he was held at Aurora, Ill., on a charge of larceny. He spent nearly all the period from 1923 to 1933 in jails and prisons. He is believed to have been with Dillinger when the latter shot his way out of an apartment house at St. Paul recently.

Hamilton is Dillinger's closest companion. He is 34 years old. His criminal record began in 1927, when he was sentenced to 25 years in Indiana prison for bank robbery. He escaped September 26, 1933, and was one of the gang who rescued Dillinger from the Lima, Ohio, jail, killing Sheriff Jesse Sarber.

Carroll has been associated with Dillinger in his recent bank robberies and other crimes.

With the killings in Wisconsin, it is estimated that 14 persons have been killed either by the Dillinger gang or in attempts to capture Dillinger or members of the gang. Whether all of these killings are attributed to Dillinger's criminal activities probably never will be definitely determined, as scores of crimes have been attributed to him since his rescue from the Lima jail and subsequent arrest and escape from the Crown Point, Ind., jail.

Soviet Plans Shifts To Political Bureaus

Moscow (U.P.).—Political departments similar to those already existing in connection with the operation of collective farms, state farms, transport and civil aviation, shortly will be established throughout the commissariat of heavy industry, according to well-informed observers.

It is also reliably reported that the troops transport section of the GPU will be placed under the direction of the political department of transport commissariat.

Turkish Woman Named "Headman" of Village

Istanbul (U.P.).—A woman has just been elected "headman" of the Turkish village of Emirli. She is the third of her sex to achieve such a position.

Ummil Hanum, the new woman chief, fought under Mustapha Kemal in the war of independence and distinguished herself for heroism in the fighting close to her own village.

She is 50, strong and vigorous, and a good speaker.

Crash Victim Succumbs To Unsuspected Injury

Danville, Va., April 23 (Spl.).—George Moore, one of 13 persons injured in a motor collision on the South Boston road March 31, died today at a local hospital.

He was discharged nearly a month ago as out of danger, but last night was seized with severe abdominal pains and died within an hour after entering the hospital. Doctors believe he had suffered from an internal injury not recognized at first.

Turks to Fire Public Servants for Loafing

Istanbul (U.P.).—"Red-tape" delays in official business are being ruthlessly speeded up in Turkey.

The Turk's favorite cry used to be "Yavash, yavash," meaning "slowly, slowly."

Now the government has issued an order providing instant dismissal for any government servant who fails to finish a piece of formal official business within 24 hours.

Telephone Rate Cut Protested

Court Arguments Start; Legality Questioned by Company.

Attorneys representing the Public Utilities Commission and the Chesapeake and Telephone Co. yesterday began before Justice Jesse C. Adkins, in District Supreme Court, arguments as to the legality of the commission's order placing in effect a 10 per cent reduction in phone rates.

Evidence was taken several weeks ago, but Justice Adkins deferred arguments. Attorney R. A. Van Orsdel, acting for the phone company, informed Justice Adkins the reduction order was illegal because the finding that rates existing when it was passed were "unjust and unreasonable" was not made.

Assistant Corporation Counsel William A. Roberts, for the commission, and George P. Hoover, associated with Van Orsdel, will conclude their arguments today.

Public Works Plans League Slump Cure

Geneva (U.P.).—Public works as a solution of the world's depression are to be advanced at the next general assembly of the League of Nations.

Secretary General Avenol has issued an invitation to the governments of 56 countries to inform the league, before August 15, of their main public works projects.

These should include methods of financing and administration, together with the expectations of results therefrom.

Ada Burroughs Forgot to List Cannon Loans

On Stand, Secretary Says She Erred Frequently in Making Reports.

spired with Cannon to violate the corrupt practices act. But when asked why she failed to place his name against various loans and repayment reported to the Clerk of the House, she replied softly:

"Well, it seems I made an error, various errors in making the reports."

"It Was an Error."

Firmly, but quietly, Prosecutor John J. Wilson pressed the solemn, middle-aged defendant regarding the fact that all the loans reported as anonymous came from the bishop. Miss Burroughs, apparently unmoved fell back in each case upon her answer:

"It was an error."

Attired in her familiar broad-brimmed brown hat, and a tan suit over a yellow blouse, Miss Burroughs was on the stand nearly three hours yesterday.

Under direct examination by her counsel, she asserted that Cannon never told her of any contributions of E. C. Jameson before they collaborated on her final report to Congress in February, 1929.

It is for failure to report $48,000 of the New York insurance man's contributions that she and the bishop are charged with conspiracy against the corrupt practices act.

Miss Burroughs also testified:

She did not remember writing the letter of January 5, 1929, to Jameson at Cannon's dictation, thanking the New Yorker for his "generous support;"

She first learned that Jameson had contributed more than the $17,300 she did report to Congress when he testified before a lobby committee in 1930;

She did not herself receive campaign contributions directly, but through Cannon or others, who opened the committee's mail;

She knew nothing of the telegram sent to Jameson advising him to tell Congress he had contributed only $17,300 to the "headquarters committee" and $48,000 to a "State committee" in Virginia;

She felt there was "nothing unusual" in the check-switching transaction of February 11, 1929, which wound up the committee's accounts.

"Did Bishop Cannon ever suggest to you that you should fail to report to Congress any moneys contributed by Mr. Jameson during the 1928 campaign?" asked Robert H. McNeill, chief of the defense counsel.

Didn't Enter Conspiracy.

"He did not," replied Miss Burroughs firmly.

"Did you ever enter into a conspiracy with him not to report any contributions at any time?"

"No, I did not."

Under cross-examination, in which the witness was treated gently and considerately by Wilson, Miss Burroughs did not fare so well.

The Government first brought out that two years after the campaign, as permitted by law, she rid herself of all checks, accounts and records of the "Headquarters Committee." She turned them over to the bishop, and since, for the purposes of the trial, had been able to obtain from him only a single ledger, to which she referred constantly yesterday.

"Did you ask for all the books?" inquired Wilson.

"He said he could only find the ledger," said Miss Burroughs.

Regarding payments she made for Cannon to Frank P. Dunford, introduced by the defense as the man who handled disbursements for the "State committee," the witness said her memory failed her, "after all these years." The phrase was constantly on her lips.

Regarding the items such as "loans" and "repayment of loans" in her reports to the House, Wilson pressed Miss Burroughs to say that she knew that under the law she should have given the names—in each case that of Bishop Cannon.

"I admit I made an error, but I just don't know why I left out the names," she said.

Over and over, "for the jury's benefit," Wilson stressed the omission of Cannon's name, but the witness made her repeated admissions unhesitatingly, without attempt at other explanation.

The Same Transaction.

Justice Peyton Gordon inquired regarding one "loan" and "repayment" reported as having been made on the same day and asked if this was all one transaction.

"I would think it was the same transaction," Miss Burroughs said in a barely audible voice.

Miss Burroughs testified that part of the contributions under $100 each came directly to her as treasurer of the "Headquarters Committee" and the balance through the bishop, but could hazard no estimate as to the proportion of each. All "loose conference collections" reached her through Cannon, she said.

Wilson drew from the witness the admission that her report to the clerk of the House, and one she made subsequently to the clerk of the Senate, were in conflict as far as certain "James Cannon, jr., on loans" items were concerned.

At the close of the session, Wilson was cross-examining vigorously on Miss Burroughs' alleged knowledge of the bishop's stock market transactions in 1928 and 1929. She declared she never had kept account of his financial transactions, did not remember applying to O. P. Hill, of the American National Bank of Richmond, for a loan for Cannon, and didn't recall signing letters "to New York" as the bishop's secretary.

The witness, however, identified her signature on three such letters.

Miss Burroughs will continue under cross-examination today.

Another witness may be former Senator Joseph S. Frelinghuysen, of New Jersey, who has been subpenaed by the defense.

Bishop Ends Testimony.

Bishop Cannon concluded his testimony yesterday by explaining he had discovered data which caused him to retract his testimony about Frelinghuysen's contributions to the campaign against Al Smith before reading in newspapers that the former New Jersey Senator had been subpenaed by the Government.

Cannon also contradicted testimony of Lee P. Oliver, Department of Justice agent, regarding the bishop's statement made to former United States Attorney Rover in 1931. Oliver told of the bishop saying he had found $5,000 in cash in a Richmond safe deposit box, after the campaign, which he had "forgotten all about." Cannon explained yesterday that what he had said was he had forgotten the money was in Richmond and had thought it was in Washington.

As a result of this testimony, Oliver will be called in rebuttal, so that the chances of the trial reaching the jury before late tomorrow are remote.

Scientists Hope New Mirror Will Prove Expansion Theory

the universe is expanding—the 200-inch telescope may indicate the particular type of expansion," Dr. Hubble said.

Are Nebulae Receding?

"Red shifts," to quote Dr. Hubble, "are due either to actual motion or to some hitherto unrecognized principle of physics. On this interpretation the nebulae are running away from us, and the farther away they are the faster they are traveling.

"The present distribution of nebulae can be represented on the assumption that they were once jammed together in our particular region of space, and at a particular instant, about 2,000 million years ago, they started rushing away in all directions at various velocities."

In his vivid description of the universe, Dr. Hubble said: "On the grand scale we may picture the stellar system (the system our sun belongs to) drifting through the universe as a swarm of bees drifting through the air. From our position, somewhere within the system, we look out through the swarm of stars, past the borders, into the universe beyond.

"It is empty for the most part—vast stretches of empty space. But here and there at immense intervals we find other stellar systems, comparable with our own. They are so distant that in general we do not see the individual stars. They appear as faint patches of light, and hence are called nebulae.

To Reach New Frontiers.

"The nebulae are great beacons scattered through the depths of space. We see a few that are large and bright. These are the near nebulae. Then we find them smaller and fainter and in constantly increasing numbers, until, with the faintest nebulae that can be detected with the greatest telescopes, we have reached the frontiers of the known universe."

The old theories of evolution—that process which has brought the world its tremendous diversity of living things—should be quietly dropped and science should make a wholly fresh start toward determining the causes through new and original lines of experiment and observation, Dr. Osborn told the afternoon gathering.

Known as one of the world's foremost experts on paleontology, Dr. Osborn presented his argument against the survival of the fittest theory of Charles Darwin by contrasting the facts available in Darwin's time and now.

Today, Dr. Osborn said, science knows 242 species of probosicea—animals of the type of the modern elephant and the extinct mammoth—all of which are descendants of a single remote ancestor, while in Darwin's time only seven species were known.

Dr. Charles B. Davenport, of Carnegie Institution, also presented a paper on an evolutionary subject—he said that man was indeed fortunate that his remote ancestors lived in the trees or else his arms might now be stunted like those of a kangaroo.

Ancestors Tree Dwellers.

The ancient ancestors of man, climbing around in the treetops developed abnormally long arms, like the arms now seen on apes and monkeys. When man became a creature who stood erect on two legs, his arms became shorter until they reached the length best adapted for the use of tools.

If man had come instead from a four-legged creature living on the ground, he might now have had a different history due to the fact that his arms would be nearly useless, Dr. Davenport said, citing the kangaroo as an example. It is because our ancestors' arms were abnormally long, that ours are as large as they are now, he said.

Also related to evolution was the paper presented by Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, curator of physical anthropology of the National Museum. He presented the life history of a feature of the human thigh bone—the hypotrochanteric fossa—a hollow in the bone that is a survival from prehuman ancestry.

This hollow, Dr. Hrdlicka said, appears about the fifth month of a baby's prenatal existence and reaches its greatest development at adolescence. Finally, in old age, new deposits of bone almost completely fill up the hollow—erasing this trace of kinship with the apes.

Total eclipses of the sun have sent great and expensive expeditions to the ends of the earth so that the corona of the sun—the streamer of light that extend out into space hundred of thousands of miles—can be observed. Now, Dr. A. M. Skellett, of New York City, told the academy, the sun's corona can be seen without the aid of an eclipse.

Sun's Light Separated.

The reason that it was formerly necessary to have an eclipse of the sun before the corona was visible was because the glare of the sun rendered it impossible to see or photograph it. The new method does away with the glare by separating the corona light from the other light.

The new method is an adoption of television apparatus, Dr. Skellet said. The sun's light is changed to electric current as it strikes a photo electric cell through a small hole which scans the region of the sun. The different intensities of light generate currents of different frequency in the cell.

Filters are used to eliminate all current except that which is the product of the light from the corona. Then this current from the corona's light illuminates a neon vapor lamp, the light from which is thrown on a photographic plate through a hole which moves in synchronization with the hole scanning the sun. The result is a photograph of the sun's corona.

Another astronomical instrument, so delicate that it could register the heat and light from a candle burning in Paris, was described by Dr. Joel Stebbins, of the University of Wisconsin. With it astronomers can determine the colors of stars too far distant to be studied by telescopes, he said.

Today's sessions will be devoted to presentation of scientific papers. The academy's distinguished guest, Dr. Arthur Eddington, noted English astronomer and philosopher of relativity, will present a paper on the unification of the relativity and quantum theories.

Iowa PWA Cases Dropped by U. S.

Lieut. Gov. Kreshel, Others Escape Prosecution.

Indictments against Lieut. Gov. Nelson G. Kreshel, of Iowa, and several others accused in PWA cases, are to be dropped, Joseph B. Keenan, Assistant Attorney General said yesterday.

The indictments will be dropped, Keenan said, upon advice of the United States Attorney at Des Moines, who had been in charge of the cases.

The U. S. Attorney, Keenan said, called Saturday and told of his intention to drop the case. His action has the approval of the U. S. Department of Justice, Keenan said.

RFC Spending Two Billions Under Budget

Improvement in Business Credited; Loans Are Being Repaid.

(Copyright, 1934, by the United Press.)

The Government's most important relief agency — the Reconstruction Finance Corporation — is falling nearly $2,000,000,000 under budget estimates in its relief activities because of reduced needs.

Administration officials attributed the decrease to the greater than expected improvement in business activity which has allowed some borrowers to repay loans and made it unnecessary for other businesses to ask for money.

When President Roosevelt compiled his budget figures for the fiscal year which ends June 30, he set $3,969,740,000 as the outside net expenditures of the RFC, a monthly average of $325,000,000.

In nine months of the fiscal year, the RFC had actually spent only $1,287,354,800, or about 40 cents for every dollar estimated.

At this rate, it was estimated that net expenditures would amount to $1,716,000,000, or $2,253,000,000 under estimates. It would appear that Chairman Jesse H. Jones' recent estimate that RFC expenses would fall a half a billion under the budget was extremely conservative.

Banks and other borrowers are repaying loans at the rate of $3,000,000 daily, and these payments are expected to reach the billion-dollar mark by June 30, compared with estimates of three-quarter billion dollars. In the first nine months they were $627,330,234.

The apparent "surplus" under proposed expenditures has made the Federal Government's borrowing program that much easier and has contributed to the recent steady rise in the Government bond market.

The chief factor in the decrease in RFC expenditures has been improvement in the banking field, partly as a result of confidence engendered by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

First Recital Of "Old Harp" Music Slated

Ancient Form of Religious Singing Will Be Heard at Charlottesville.

Charlottesville, Va., April 23 (Spl.).—"Old harp" music, a type of song which has thousands of followers throughout the South and about which little has been known until recent years by the professional musical world, will be presented for the first time on the program of the Virginia State Choral Festival Association Friday, during the three-day presentation, beginning Thursday, here.

"Old harp" singing is being presented by a musical organization headed by Dr. George Pullen Jackson, of Vanderbilt University.

Rexford Keller, director; Mary Cornelia Malone, Glenn Carroll, Daisy Fentress, Arlene Richardson, Claude Sharpe, Eugene C. Bugg and Dr. Jackson will be singers on this program.

"Old harp" singing began at least 13 centuries ago, according to John Powell, famous pianist and student of folk music, who states that "old harp" songs are in reality religious songs sung to folk tunes.

Back to Seventh Century.

"The first historical record of 'old harp' music goes back to the seventh century," Mr. Powell said. "In the eleventh century the Archbishop of York never heard a good secular tune without immediately writing sacred words to it. There are records to show that this practice was followed by the various religions of early times, and some of these interesting old manuscripts have come down to us.

"Even the Puritans of this country did not confine themselves to solemn tunes but sang psalms to hornpipes. In the eighteenth century the primitive Methodists, acting on the principle of "why should the devil have all the pretty tunes?" collected the airs of traditional songs and dances and wrote hymns to them.

"Time erased from the memory of most of the music loving people the knowledge that this music existed. Dr. Jackson discovered it being sung by thousands of people in the Southern uplands, stretching from the Valley of Virginia to the plains of Texas.

"By recognizing 'Old Harp' music the Virginia State Choral Festival will aid in spreading a general use of this type of music among those whose ancestors sang these beautiful tunes, and who are now singing much music which is inferior in beauty and musical worth to that which has been forgotten."

U. Va. Alumni on Program.

On the composers' program Friday night, students and alumni of the University of Virginia will have a prominent part.

Prof. Harry Rogers Pratt, of the school of music, director of the University Glee Club, has arranged settings of three old songs for men's voices. These will be sung by the Glee Club on the program in Cabell Hall.

John Powell heads the list of university alumni whose works will be played on the composers' program. The other two are numbered among the younger alumni, Hilton Rufty, of Richmond, and Mrs. Elizabeth Hill Wenger, of Charlottesville.

Mr. Powell will accompany Mrs. Margo Samoranya, of Norfolk, in a group of songs, one of them by himself.

Mr. Rufty will play his own piano settings of three old English folk tunes.

Mrs. Wenger has written a new "Pastorale" for flute and string quartet which will be played by five musicians from the university community.

Glee Club in Chorus.

Members of the University of Virginia Glee Club will also be in the chorus of 1,000 voices that will sing the Brahm's Requiem Saturday afternoon.

The most representative folk music program yet attempted by the festival also is being planned.

Folk musicians from the vicinity of White Top, in southwest Virginia, from around Stuart, from Albemarle and from other sections of Virginia have accepted invitations to participate.

Charlottesville folk musicians will offer a square dance, with the assistance of Marie Wilkinson and Alice Sage, of the University of Virginia.

Among other folk musicians who will appear are J. M. Hunt, of Marion; J. B. Wells, of Nelson County; J. B. Chisholm, of Albemarle; Victoria Morris, of Albemarle; Abner Keesee and Mrs. Kit Williamson, ballad singers, of Alta Vista; John Morris, winner of the Massanetta Springs Festival; J. J. Hale, of Albemarle; Lloyd Fitzgerald, of Royal Orchard.

Electric Show Of World's Fair Brought Here

"House of Magic" Opens Week's Demonstration in Capital.

The startling and entertaining demonstrations of the General Electric exhibit at the Chicago World's Fair, known to the 700,000 people who saw them as the "House of Magic," are being exhibited in Washington this week by Glenn Williams, of the General Electric research laboratory at Schenectady. The demonstrations are taking place at the Masonic Auditorium, Thirteenth and New York avenue northwest, opening yesterday and continuing through Saturday.

The stroboscope, with its "motionless motion," the cathode ray oscillograph, audible light and visible sound, ultraviolet radiations, the mysteries of high frequency and the versatile phototube, of "electric eye" will be part of the demonstration.

Mr. Williams was connected with the "House of Magic" at the fair last summer.

A high-frequency set, which resembles a miniature broadcasting station, will be used by Mr. Williams to show how the effects of the artificial fever machine are utilized in the treatment of disease. Plain glass tubes, with sealed gases inside, light up when brought into the field of the radiations, and the demonstrator will "wipe" the light from them with a sweep of his hand.

The stroboscope is a long, dark cylinder containing a neon lamp, going on and off 60 times a second. When it is on it remains so for only a ten-millionth of a second. A disk is rotated by a motor at high speed so that figures painted on its face are blurred in ordinary light. But in the light of the stroboscope they may be studied as if they were standing still. The stroboscope demonstrates how rotating machines are studied for defects while traveling at tremendous rates of speed.

How phototubes and thryratrons are combined to regulate illumination, or do 100 other tasks of a domestic or industrial nature, will be shown, as will the electric picture of sound through the use of an improved cathode ray oscillograph tube. The demonstrations will conclude with various ultraviolet ray experiments, showing the complete changes in color schemes that may be effected by the use of the ultraviolet.

Hrdlicka Says Every Organ of Body Lives, Dies in Cycles

Compares Human Beings to Highly Complicated Colonies of Ants.

Extensive studies of both the living and dead indicate that each organ and part of the body lives and dies in a cycle of its own, according to a statement issued yesterday by Dr. Alex Hrdlicka, of the Smithsonian Institution.

"It is as though each person, so far as the growth curves of life are concerned, were an aggregation of thousands of dependent, yet partly independent, individuals," Dr. Hrdlicka said.

"Thus living, for such a complex organism as man or one of the higher animals, becomes roughly analogous to the highly complicated colony of the social insect, such as bees or ants, or to a military maneuver in which thousands of different movements must be kept coordinated at all times in one general movement, yet each soldier retains a certain amount of individuality.

"There is accumulating evidences that when the growth cycle of any important organ is quickened prematurely or badly disturbed, the eventual result is the death of the organism. Life of the individual depends on rigid coordination of pace of all its vital parts."

Heater Blast Injures Power Plant Worker

Second-degree burns on his face, neck and chest were suffered late yesterday by Franklin Adams, 30, of the 200 block of F street northeast, when a heater on which he was at work at the Potomac Electric Power Co.'s plant at First and V streets southwest exploded. Now It's Just as Safe to Bathe As It Is to Fall Out of Bed

Statistics Show Accidents in Tubs Few and Far Between.

The much-maligned bathtub is cleansed of the charge of being a major cause of injuries in the home by recent insurance statistics, which reveal that taking a bath is almost as safe as sitting in the parlor chair or on the old porch rocker.

The menace of slipping in the bath or shower was responsible for only 893 out of the 11,717 injuries in and around the home, as compared to 600 falls from chairs and tables, the figures show. The undeserved reputation of the bathtub dates back, it is believed, to the days when floating soap was but little known, and the sinking variety lurked at the bottom of the tub.

Getting out of bed seems to be a good way of going back to bed, for 308 of the accidents cited were attributed to this cause. Cuts topped the list with 4,054 injuries, with falls on stairs and steps a close second.

The statistics are taken from 28,314 claims for accidents in or around the home, paid to personal accident insurance policyholders of one company during a period of 12 years, ending in 1933.

Hard Boiled But Edible.

Pacifism in the Gran Chaco has reached a point calculated to turn old-school colonels quite choleric. In Bolivia, at least, patriotism seems to be flagging in the long and seemingly useless war with Paraguay. And now, just as the new Foreign Affairs Minister was beginning to hint at arbitration, a tribe of Bolivian Indians is reported as exhibiting its sentiments by first slaying and then eating the recruiting officers sent down to exercise the draft.

Our own pacifists have never gone quite so far as this, and we sincerely hope they never will. For the method chosen by those Indians, while undeniably effective, is a surrender of the moral dignity in passive resistance. It is a petulant expression of what the I. W. W.'s used to call "direct action." It is uncivilized. Indeed it is almost as uncivilized as war itself.

And there is another point. Cannibalism may be an effective form of pacifism. But if the Bolivian recruiting-sergeants are up to standard, the practitioners of this form of pacifism will before long be thinking more of their digestions than their principles.

Alternative to Cybele.

Washington is in the midst of artistic warfare. On the eve of the opening of the Public Work of Art Projects' exhibition of CWA paintings at the Corcoran gallery, come reports of the latest skirmish. A tentative palm of victory goes to Rexford G. Tugwell, self-confessed conservative of the New Deal, who has raised hearty objections to the Gilbert White murals now being installed in the new building of the Department of Agriculture. Had he ordered them covered with a thick coat of whitewash, or even destroyed with Rockefellian fury, there would have been few objections which only a seasoned New Dealer could not have politely ignored.

Mr. Tugwell, however, will let them stay, although there will be no public celebration when they are unveiled. He shuddered when he made the announcement. "I would have liked something more modern," he said, gazing sadly at a classical interpretation of agriculture in the person of a rather squat lady, yclept Cybele, goddess of the earth's rich yield, who is surrounded by a waitress in flowing gown and a somewhat stout, naked lady wearing her hair in a Gibsonesque fashion.

Something more modern would have been more appropriate, and it was suggested that a painting called "Filling the Ice House" be substituted. Cynical defenders of gods and goddesses objected. Ice houses, they scoffed with an air of finality, are out of date, so why not have a pretty picture of, say, a frigidaire? That, it seems, is a swell idea. Either ice house or its descendant, the electric refrigerator, has a lot more to do with farming than the pagan Cybele, for whom, we wager, even Mr. White had to search in the encyclopedia.

Certainly either ice house or refrigerator would make the average American farmer feel more at home than some goddess draped in gauze, a stack of classic wheat, a lady with a tray, or a recumbent Junoesque nude.

By Any Other Name—

Yesterday marked the three hundred and seventieth anniversary of the birth of the man who wrote Shakespeare's plays—if Shakespeare wrote them; if he was born in 1564, and if he was born on April 23. The authorities of the Folger Memorial Library and of the Wilson Teachers' College appropriately observed the day, and Mrs. Elizabeth Smith Friedman said that, whoever wrote Shakespeare, it wasn't Bacon.

The Folger and Wilson celebrations were beautiful and dignified, but the Friedman announcement was consolatory. Mrs. Friedman is a distinguished cryptanalyst. She knows the cipher undoubtedly employed by Bacon in his political work. She says she has applied that cipher to Shakespeare and is unable to find anything that would make her think Bacon wrote his plays. She might well add that it is difficult to find anything in the admitted works of Bacon to convince a critic of this philosopher's ability to write even Titus Andronicus.

Discussion as to the authorship of Shakespeare is an example of pedantic scholarship carried to almost idiotic extremes. Its most apparent result is to draw red herrings across the trail of Shakespearean enjoyment. Ourselves, as literary conservatives, believe in the Shakespeare of the First Folio's Droeshout print and of the Flower Portrait preserved at Stratford. And we also agree with Mark Twain: The products of the pen that wrote Macbeth and Romeo and Juliet are sufficient unto themselves; we don't care whether Shakespeare was written by Shakespeare or by another man of the same name.

Words Of Wisdom.

Speaking "only my individual views," yet making it clear that he conveyed a personal message from the White House, Secretary of State Cordell Hull in New York yesterday made a notable address to those gathered for the annual meeting of the Associated Press. It was not concerned primarily with the foreign policy of the United States, though Mr. Hull made an integral part of a well-rounded whole the thesis that "the problems of international commerce are at the very core of this country's economic dilemma."

Leaving the field of his special responsibility, the Secretary sought rather to give his important audience a picture of the Administration as devoted equally to "all the fundamentals of popular government" and to economic and social rehabilitation, carried through with regard to desirable reform as well as to recovery alone. Public regimentation, said Mr. Hull, is not desired. Centralization of power has been developed in Washington only as a revocable grant. "Self-regulation should be the true policy. Its success, of course, would rest with those individuals, groups and industries affected."

These wise and penetrating observations come at the psychological moment from a leading spokesman of the Administration. They are calculated to ease somewhat the obviously spreading anxiety as to the underlying purposes and motives of much of our emergency legislation. Nor did Mr. Hull hesitate to be specific in his admission of the need for using "cautious concern" in making haste. After stressing the need for control of the speculative process, he added:

> . . . If upon fair and searching examination some liberalization of one or more of the alleged drastic clauses in the security act seems advisable, in my view affirmative action should be taken without delay.

The policy of moderation advanced by Secretary Hull will help to restore a confidence in the Administration which has been clearly and rapidly waning in recent weeks. It serves to add emphasis to such informed criticism as that just put forward on the securities act and stock exchange regulation bill by the Durable Goods Industries Committee of the NRA. In that report, also, a sharp distinction was drawn between legislation which seeks to remove intolerable abuses and that which aims at unnecessary and destructive regulation.

Those who would trace all such criticism to some pernicious lobby; those who pretend to see the hand of "Wall Street" in all opposition to the rapid extension of State Socialism, would do well to study more closely the sane and temperate observations of Secretary Hull. Evidently he holds no brief for that peculiar theory of government by querulous invective which has taken so strange and strong a hold in Washington lately.

Behind John Dillinger.

Anger is the immediate emotion aroused by mention of John Dillinger. The whole country is aroused by this mad dog of an outlaw who has snarled and snapped his way, causing the death of a dozen persons in his brief, vicious career. But anger will do little more than to spur on the abortive search that has been made for him since he escaped from the blundering care of Sheriff Lillian Holley at Crown Point, Ind., jail last month. His latest escapade may be his last, for outraged forces of law are reported swooping down upon him, determined that he will no longer be at large. They can not afford to fail, for Dillinger at large is a national disgrace.

Nor will anger alone dispose of the complicated factors which have helped to make Dillinger an enemy of society. Anger alone will throw no light upon the system which threw him, a farm boy charged with a minor crime, into a penitentiary where he became the associate of vicious criminals. Anger will not revise a system of State and local law enforcement, which has consistently failed to equip itself adequately to cope with crime committed in the modern manner.

So at bottom it is perhaps not merely John Dillinger at whom we should be angry. Some blame should be reserved for ourselves, whose consistent unwillingness to revitalize the national system of crime prevention and punishment is in part responsible. Dillinger himself is but a symbol of our own hit-and-miss method of handling the problem of the criminal. Modern methods of pursuit alone are not what is needed. Intelligent and persistent overhauling of our courts, our police and our penal system is just as necessary.

A Plan, But No Funds.

A rather sharp ultimatum has been laid before the District Commissioners by the Parole Board. Either an adequate staff should be provided to carry out the provisions of the parole law or that act should be repealed. Of course, members of the board can neither secure a staff nor repeal the law through their own efforts. But they can resign from their futile task, as Dr. Loren B. T. Johnson has already done.

The existing parole system was designed as a model plan for the rehabilitation of prisoners. But having created the plan, Congress forgot to set up an adequate staff to make it operative. In the opinion of the Parole Board the system has become a "public menace" because prisoners are being released without proper supervision or control. Members of the board are so wrought up over continued disregard of their recommendations that they are ready to demand repeal of the law unless some practical steps are taken to end their helplessness.

A request for funds that would partly correct this situation is tied up in the Budget Bureau. Federal agencies are frequently generous in making plans for the District and niggardly in appropriating money to carry them out. Between the theory of an "ideal system" and its practical application to existing conditions there is a wide gap. The Administration might be in a better position to talk about "national planning" if it would give heed to some of the simple problems of community planning that arise in the National Capital.

Equalizing Wage Rates.

Elimination of the differential wage rates authorized by the coal code, which expired April 1, resulted in the refusal of Alabama operators to pay the increased rates under the NRA agreement, and led to extensive strikes. The Recovery Administration has now intervened in an attempt to settle the controversy by ordering a reduction in basic rates which leaves them somewhat above the old level, but much below that of the Northern coal fields. The new order also prohibits the sale of coal in other districts at undercutting prices.

The incorporation of similar wage differentials in numerous codes has been defended as a method of allowing for variations in living costs. Objectors, however, insist that data on living costs are inadequate and misleading. Thus it is argued that the mill-worker who lives in a Southern rural community has a very small outlay for rent, clothing, &c. Nevertheless he has to forego certain comforts and amusements that his fellow worker in a Northern town could obtain at relatively small expense. The result is that any exact comparison of living costs is virtually impossible.

Debate along such lines is not only fruitless, but it is irrelevant because the competitive situation created by the existence of sectional differences in wage rates is the issue of immediate practical concern. Even if the Southern miner or mill-worker were in all respects as efficient as his Northern and Western counterpart, and even if his living costs were as high or higher, the demand for code recognition of existing wage differentials would persist.

Lower customary wages, cheaper power, and other advantages have been responsible for the establishment of industries in certain areas, and have caused industrial capital to be shifted from one section to another. Since this process of adaptation proceeds gradually, the inevitable losses resulting from desertion of high cost or naturally less-favored regions are not so severely felt. In course of time, moreover, sectional differences in wage rates tend to disappear, and it is desirable that they should when they are due to imperfect competition between different geographical areas.

By bringing discrepancies sharply to public attention, codification will probably hasten such elimination. But sudden changes designed to produce wage rate uniformity overnight inevitably threaten serious industrial dislocations and loss of employment for workers dependent upon the concerns affected by new wage rulings.

Models In Moscow.

The Dress and Lingerie Trust of Soviet Russia has just completed its first fashion show. Forty thousand women came from all over the country to gaze with critical admiration at 150 models, derived from the latest Paris creations. What further proof is needed that the Revolution is dead? The exhibition may be even more significant than recognition by the United States. It may mark a turning point in the history of the Soviet. True, the frills and frumperies of M. Jean Patou were "modified" to suit Soviet women, but it was just as much a fashion show as if it had been held in some Fifth avenue salon.

No one expected the emancipated women of Russia to live forever merely for the sake of the Revolution. That might inspire mere man to endure hardships, to "go without the meat and curse the bread." But sooner or later the eternal feminine was bound to break out in a counter-revolution. National equality of the two sexes could not endure even in Russia without silk stockings and satin slips. When the wiser commissars heard the rumblings, they knew better than to try to suppress them. Instead, they sent to Paris and New York to learn the one sure way for keeping women happy.

The designers returned, bursting with ideas. And at a time when Spring was blowing her trumpets, they opened the first Soviet fashion show. It was a psychological achievement. Reports indicate that the 80,000 eyes—turned from machines and the spring planting—saw evening gowns and sport dresses that had nothing of Mother Hubbard about them. The intense interest manifested is not surprising, though, for at the Moscow shops for several years one of the most popular displays has been pink garters! If the soviet dictators thought they could keep women happy merely by giving them men's work and men's clothing, they should have known better. Their error lay in forgetting that, even in Moscow, every woman must some day buy a new hat!

It's rather difficult for a layman to understand why the Government forbids lotteries and finances farmers.

Mile Posts

A Parade of the Past From the Files of The Post.

TWENTY YEARS AGO TODAY.

MEXICAN FEDERALS fired across the border into Laredo, Tex., killing several Americans. All of the American consuls in Mexico, whether in federal or constitutional territory, were authorized by the Secretary of State to leave the country.

WESTERN HIGH SCHOOL was the scene of a four-alarm fire which destroyed the entire building. The loss was estimated to be about $500,000. The fire started about 1:30 a. m. and the flames soon spread throughout the entire building.

TEN YEARS AGO TODAY.

THE SENATE passed the soldiers' bonus bill by a vote of 67 to 17, but the Copeland amendment, carrying a cash option choice, was defeated by a vote of 48 to 37.

BERLIN AND VIENNA speculators were hard hit by a sudden rise in the value of the French franc. Fantastic covering by shorts drove the price to a level that caused Paris considerable alarm.

"The Fleet's In."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: May I say that it seems to me your editorial in this morning's paper, entitled "The Fleet's In," is quite beside the point.

Admiral Rodman's objections were based on the fact that the picture to which he objected was not especially descriptive of the Navy and its activities any more than the activities of any other body of men on the loose. If you don't believe it, look about you. It would not be good taste to place a picture of drunken Senators in a hotel bedroom, entitled "The Lobby Meets," in the Senate Office Building. Good taste demands that dignity of office and of life be upheld. There are many functions of life which are considered good taste to perform in private and we do not place pictures of these acts in our parlors in the name of art.

SAMUEL C. SHARES.
Washington, April 20.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I wish to express my appreciation of the generally fair and lucid manner in which your editorial staff handle their subjects from day to day. These editorials are lively and virile, and it is refreshing to follow the reactions of the news columns on your page from week to week.

One of your pieces of today, however, "The Fleet's In," would seem to depart from your usual standard, in that you take the Navy to task for exercising its right to say when a painting reflects the true spirit of the institution. I agree with Admiral Rodman in his assumption that because some sailors are painted "in dalliance with lassies on Riverside drive" this may be taken as proof that "The Fleet's In." You state that "no trim, white ships drift lazily" in the background, and naturally there would be "no fronded palms lifting branches to a cloudless sky" on Riverside drive. The canvas, therefore, may be taken only as a trenchant but not too clever a piece of cynicism directed at the boys in blue.

Granting that the painting is worth while, why not call it what you suggest, "The Urge of Spring?" Even an admiral could not object to that, and it would apply not only to sailors, but to soldiers, as well as newspaper writers.

JAMES DENSON.
Washington, April 20.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Please let a woman who is not an "artist" but who does know what things look like, say a word on your editorial, "The Fleet's In."

Admiral Rodman, during his "long and distinguished career as a sailor," surely knows when a picture is drawn true to form—or he has no place on any ship, not even a tugboat. I'll wager that the "moral grounds" is not all he is mad at. Had Bud Fisher drawn that atrocity, he would have had a good laugh, and dropped the subject.

I am glad such a protest has been made, and it will be backed up by every decent person. Altogether too much ill-drawn and vicious stuff of this low order is being accepted in our galleries. Into the garbage can with them! That is where such offensive products belong.

MARIE J. ANDRUS.
Washington, April 20.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Congratulations on your editorial titled "The Fleet's In." I enjoyed it thoroughly and hail it as intelligent art criticism. The American public regard the two words "virtue" and "art" as synonymous. The fact that this is not true, will probably upset them as deeply as when they first learned about Santa Claus.

Subject matter is always more important to them than technique. If the picture represents a baby curling his pink toes or kittens in a basket, they cry, "Splendid job!" but when the canvas shows slums or a drunkard, they shout, "Horrible and coarse."

I have no doubt that Admiral Rodman is an excellent naval officer and in case of war could probably save the country, but we are not at war.

All-Night Parking.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In a recent newspaper article, Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer is quoted as saying that the matter of the ban on all night parking of automobiles on the streets of Washington is up to the motorists.

The matter of all-night parking on our streets concerns everybody in the city; not alone the motorists. The American Automobile Association recently conducted a vote among its members on this subject and while the results were given out as approximately 60 per cent favoring all night parking, I think that a 40 per cent vote of motorists against parking is very significant indeed. I feel certain that if the vote were broader and included nonowners of cars as well, the result would be unmistakable.

The fact that of 150,000 cars in the District, about 50,000 are left on the streets at night, is a "vote" in itself, and this matter is of such vital importance to the whole population of the city that its adoption or rejection should not be left in the hands of car owners alone.

May I add, also, that as almost every city in this country, except Washington, prohibits all-night parking of automobiles on the streets, and notwithstanding the arguments which appear from time to time in the papers, for and against the same; many of them very cleverly conceived and forcefully expressed, the fact remains that if Washington is right, then all the other cities are wrong in the stand they take on this subject.

A Traveling Man's Opinion.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am a traveling man and have been favored with frequent close-ups of many dignitaries—both here and in continental Europe. Your half-tone picture of President Roosevelt—first page, April 12 issue—is impressive and inspiring. Nowhere in the world during my 50 years has there been a man of such rare and outstanding personality, plus character and ability, as this wonderful President of ours.

Your photo showing him in unconventional pose emphasizes his strength of character and his natural, normal self. This picture should be done in color and broadcast throughout our great land as a further stimulus to those who think they are burdened, worried and downtrodden.

President Roosevelt, despite his worries, trials and tribulations, is able to smile and be happy. He is a real exponent and believer in "faith, hope and charity," for all and with all. Let's all be with him 100 per cent. "Smile and the world smiles with you."

Revolution Over.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Revolution by violence in America died aborning, because thinking men are tired of labor or capitalistic bankers who gamble with other people's money, and just as tired of the Communists who preach hatred. They turn to Roosevelt, whose plan gives promise of something more permanent than street barricades, gives hopes of a free life with industrial control of society in the hands of all, not a dictatorship of the proletariat or the bankers; because he has brought to full life the child labor amendment; because he seeks equal wages for women doing men's work, thus helping to keep business competition decent; because he has been big enough to see that panics and depressions are amenable to human control and in no sense of the word acts of God.

Father Coughlin said months ago that from now on propaganda would start to belittle Roosevelt's efforts. It is now here, saying that his efforts are a flash in the pan and, in the final analysis, will not amount to a damn. But if we give real backing throughout the country, Mr. Roosevelt will yet show the world social revolution can be accomplished by political action; that democracy is a living thing and the hope of intelligent men.

Elevated Landing Fields.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Eugene Vidal is in charge of the building of the steel floating islands—five of which will be anchored in a line across the Atlantic—as way stations for landing planes.

The idea is very simple, and the practical difficulties are not insurmountable, but why not do the same thing on land? Why not erect steel platforms as air terminals for each city, in place of the muddy and inconvenient landing fields now in use?

The elevated site would enable us to locate the flying field in the most convenient place to suit the needs of the community. Flying from a steel platform 300 feet high means a great increase in safety. It means economy of operation. You lose no time in getting to the field, as you go up, in an elevator, instead of traveling 10 miles in a taxi, to take a seat in the plane.

The elevated site will be the next basic improvement in flying.

EDMOND FONTAINE.
Ruxton, Md., April 19.

Not King George.

Libraries everywhere have suffered in recent years, but it is doubtful if there is another in the country that has had an experience comparable to that of Chicago, which has not bought a book since the spring of 1931. Chicago readers, however, have continued to wear them out, with the result that there are now about 125,000 fewer books at their call. Remembering that Queen Victoria donated 8,000 volumes to Chicago when the fire of 1871 destroyed most of the city's books, Carl B. Roden, librarian, has opened a campaign for contributions to relieve the situation. To date, some 10,000 volumes have been presented. While there is no information as to donors, we doubt very much that the British royal family is again on the list. The Chicago library's plight, like that of the city's school teachers, grows out of the taxpayers' strike, and that goes back to Big Bill Thompson. Unless King George is more gallant than most of us or has a richer sense of humor, he will not empty the book shelves of Buckingham Palace for the benefit of a city so recently presided over by his would-be snoot puncher.

The Post Impressionist

From White To Cadmus.

Postoffice, Tuesday.

WHY does a painter disapprove of disapproval of his "school" more than he disapproves of approval of some rival "school?"

This isn't a careless conundrum. It is a serious question in the psychology of artists. The moderns are almost tolerant of the admission of Gilbert White's classical murals to the new Agricultural Building; Mr. Tugwell, generally considered their spokesman in the matter, lets it be known that, although he would have liked something more Newdealish, he will accept Mr. White's interpretation of Virgil. But war still wages over the Navy Department's refusal of "The Fleet's In."

If your memory can travel back as far as last week, you will recall that painting by Paul Cadmus, which the painters refuse to forget. It depicts, according to no less authority than The Washington Post, "drunken sailors on shore-leave." One appears to be insensible upon a park bench. Five others are amorously or bibaciously amusing themselves with young women of dubious refinement.

* * *

"To err is," alas, "human." Just possibly, your have witnessed such a scene in real life, along Riverside Drive, New York, when the fleet hovered on the Hudson. It is also just possible that you may approve of this painting as a work of art. These, however, are not points immediately at issue—among the naval authorities. A painting can be "factual," yet untrue—good art, yet undesirable. Such seems to be the stand those authorities have taken.

"It was right artistic," Secretary Swanson is quoted as saying; "but not true to the Navy. It shows all the derelictions of the Navy and none of its virtues."

So the offending work was removed from public view—and ordered, says this newspaper, to the home of Assistant Secretary Henry L. Roosevelt, who is declared to have declared:

"It is out of sight and will continue to be out of sight."

Now, what would you speculate concerning the reactions to this among the painting craft? You might say that, the picture's draughtmanship being, to your inartistic eye, rather crude, the modernist would condemn Mr. Swanson as an offender against modern art, while the classicist would praise his artistic judgment.

Yet listen, with us, to a merely middle-aged classicist and a dangerously young artist of the most modern mode.

Classicist: From a technical standpoint, there are all the vices of the modernistic school about "The Fleet's In." But there's real power there, too. Speaking simply as an artist, I like it, although it's new-fangled.

Modernist: From a technical standpoint, it's a flop and a throwback. It's a weak imitation of Hogarth—in its draughtsmanship, anyhow. I'm against it, as a work of art, because it's so old-fashioned.

Classicist: But you got to admit that it's realism.

Modernist: Don't try to be a combination of Philip Gilbert Hamerton and John Ruskin—or whatever his name was! That picture is perverted romance.

Classicist: If you mean it's immoral——

Modernist: You're all wet. I mean the picture must have made George Moore turn over in his grave. It not only tells a story; it preaches a sermon!

Classicist: So you think it's a good thing that it was banned, do you?

Modernist: I think it was an outrage!

Classicist: I'm afraid I don't follow you.

Modernist: You never do. You follow Fragonard. You're 'after' Benjamin West—and a long way after.

Classicist: Well, you're 'after' the charcoal artist who drew the pictures in the caveman's cave. And you're after trouble, and getting close. But if you think "The Fleet's In" is poor art, I don't see why you don't applaud its suppression. I think Swanson was right.

Modernist: You think the picture has real artistic power, and yet you think it oughtn't to be shown! I don't get you.

Classicist: You think the picture is nothing but a mess of artistic faults, and yet you think it ought to be shown. I don't get you.

Modernist: Listen a minute. This CWA racket's a Government racket, isn't it? And did you ever hear of a Government with an artistic sense? You know you didn't. So there wasn't ever any question of artistic values being even expected in the CWA show. But the Government does guarantee freedom of speech, and painting's one kind of speech. Well, then, here comes a picture that, bad as it is artistically, shows up evil—shows up something that's rotten and I say, when Swanson and the rest of 'em suppress it, they're suppressing free speech!

Classicist: Suppose I invite a man to a tea-fest and he starts telling the other guests about the family-skeleton in the cupboard? Would I be suppressing free speech if I showed him the door? Let Cadmus exhibit his picture in some opposition camp—in New York, at Union Square or the Empire State Building. Even in a real art exhibition, there's something more important than art—more important to the owners of the gallery that's housing the exhibition.

* * *

Modernist: You talk like Rembrandt Peale!

Classicist: You talk like Degas!

Do they?
Anyhow, they're still talking.

Along the Potomac

With Carlisle Bargeron

ONE thing about the New Deal of which I am very thankful is that the opportunity seems now here, or will be presently, when the employe may have the opportunity to show that he knows much more about running business than the employer. A thing that I have been utterly unable to understand, throughout the depression and in the present slow recovery stages, is the philosophy that the so-called bosses owed the employe a living.

That no one in a country so wealthy as ours should be permitted to go hungry I could readily accept. But that an employe had some inherent right to be employed or that the employer owed it to employes to keep them employed as a cost of his employer citizenship was a contention that I could not comprehend. Of course, I may be wrong.

BARGERON.

* * * *

It is a fact, however, that I have considered the attitude of organized and unorganized labor over the past four years most untenable. They have overlooked entirely that they were part and parcel of the prosperity spree, that they would have hung in effigy anyone who would have tried to stop them.

And through the depression period and in the period through which we are going now their attitude is that somebody owes them employment and at wages and under conditions which they would have prescribed by the United States Government. So far as I know, no single one of the labor leaders has yet suggested any means or proposed any plan by which he himself would put men to work. He has, instead, insisted upon telling someone else how to do it.

I think it is one of the weaknesses of the American Federation of Labor that in all of its vituperations against the employer it has seldom in history set up any business which in itself employed men. Not once since the depression set in has it, to my knowledge, submitted a plan of employment at its own hands. The attitude has always been: "The employers have got to put our men to work." Why, in view of the generally accepted stand that all of our industrial, financial and business leaders fell down in the depression, our labor leaders have not come forward and themselves employed some men, is a qustion which I can not answer.

* * * *

The point has been made that our capitalists had all of the capital, that the labor leaders notwithstanding their smartness, could not get hold of it. One thing that has been overlooked, of course, is that organized labor had a bank in Cleveland, that it went broke during the depression and some of its officials were in something more than hot water as a result.

And, frankly, I can't believe, even accepting the contention the capitalists had all of the capital, that labor with its resources could not have opened up some small enterprise and given employment to at least a few men. It has not done anything of this kind, though. No, its whole attitude has been to sit back and demand that employers come and give them jobs, the same employers, incidentally, of whom it speaks disparagingly and insists should be punished.

* * * *

But the opportunity will be here presently for the labor leaders to show how they can give employment. Assuming they have not been able to get any capital, before, I see no reason why any group of them should not be able to do so under the forthcoming bill by which the Government, either through the Federal Reserve Banks or through the RFC, will lend money to private industry. I am satisfied that any group of these gentlemen who know so much about the conduct of business will be able to get a five-year loan to establish any such business as they might have in mind.

There is no reason, either, in view of the fact that the Administration through its security and stock exchange bills is stifling other business, why the new business men should not find the going very easy. It seems to me to be the opportunity of a lifetime for those who have complained about the way the employers did things. Here is an excellent opportunity for them to show what kind of employers they can make.

Indeed, they must either do this, in my opinion, or the whole theory of class division in behalf of class advancement will fall with a flop.

Blanton Blocks Vote in House On Pension Bill

Filibuster Delays Ballot Three Weeks on Old Age Measure.

the next District day, which probably will be the last of the session. As Blanton said he would repeat his fight against the bill, its chances of passage are considered slim.

Another setback to the bill came from the District Commissioners, who previously had indorsed the legislation. In a letter to Mrs. Norton they reiterated their approval of the "general nature and objective" of the measure, but declared "the District budget can not possibly carry the financial load" at this time.

Provisions of Measure.

The bill would provide for payments up to $35 a month to indigents 65 years of age or older, who have been residents of the District 10 years or longer. It is estimated it would cost the District $248,000 a year.

Mrs. Norton explained to the House that the Texan had threatened to filibuster against the District bill because Texas has no old age pension law.

She said Blanton had said he didn't want the District to have such a law until Texas enacted such legislation, as it would be embarrassing for him at the approaching primary.

Aided by Representative Taber (Republican), of New York, Blanton tried numerous schemes which he admitted were for the purpose of "killing time" and then spoke an hour in opposition to the bill.

Members frequently raised points of order that the Texan was not speaking on the bill. Blanton's remarks were directed chiefly to the Federal relief contributions to the District and the deletion of the tax cut from the District supply bill.

Black Takes Floor.

When Representative Black (Democrat), of New York, took the floor immediately after Blanton, he said that in the previous debate "there has been not much logic nor social philosophy and a great many errors."

Several times Blanton aroused Mrs. Norton's resentment. She appealed to the House to help her end the filibuster, asking:

"Is the House going to support this committee which has worked hard for the District, or is one man going to frustrate all of its efforts?"

Heckled frequently by Blanton's colleagues, Mrs. Norton at one time retorted: "I think the residents of the District ought to have something to say about how they shall spend their own money."

A warning that he would also fight the District Commissioners' bill asking authorization to borrow $20,000,000 from the Public Works Administration was given by Blanton.

"Waste" Says Blanton.

"I will never permit the District to borrow money to waste on the municipal center," he said.

During an exchange between Blanton and Representative Weideman (Democrat), of Michigan, District schools were called "the worst in the country" by Weideman and "the finest in the world" by Blanton.

Debate was terminated abruptly at 5 o'clock when Representative Taber made a point of no quorum, forcing Mrs. Norton to move that the committee arise although no vote had been taken on the bill.

Four other District bills on the calendar were not even reached.

SEA CHARM.

(Portsmouth, England.—Only one decoration was allowed on the bow of the Endeavour as the British challenging yacht was launched. It was a little bouquet of orange and blue flowers to which was attached a card reading, "Best wishes to all concerned from the landylady of the Fairy Tavern, who helped to run the keel, Mrs. G. M. Hoskins."—News item.)

In September when the British
Try again to lift the cup
With the gallant, trim Endeavour
Sending hopes of England up,
Not alone to hull and white wings
Will they trust, as sailors do,
But to Mrs. G. M. Hoskins,
Of the Fairy Tavern, too.
They'll be eager for good weather
And they'll like a spanking breeze;
They'll be hoping she goes swiftly
Through the calm or tossing seas;
They'll depend on skill and wisdom
And to shrewdness at the wheel—
(And to Mrs. G. M. Hoskins,
For she helped to run the keel).
Tommy Sopwith gave his money,
The designers did their best;
Naval architects gave fully
Of their brains to meet the test;
Hundreds labored long and willing,
And we'll laud them cheerily—
(Not forgetting Mrs. Hoskins
And her tavern by the sea).
When the sails are taut and straining
And the winds howl through the shrouds—
When the vessel's wake is boiling
To the cheering from the crowds,
Such dependence as is called for
Will be placed on such as they—
(With a thought to Mrs. Hoskins
And a faded, dry bouquet).
Just some flow'rs, blue and orange,
Gathered in the April days,
Lashed to bow of the Endeavour
When she glided down the ways;
Just a card that reads "Best Wishes"—
Wishes, honest, blunt and real,
From the Fairy Tavern hostess
Who had helped to run the keel.
Helped through banter and through laughter,
Helped through gleaming mugs of ale—
(Who shall say these have no power
To the fleetest ships that sail?)
Helped by wine and helped by stories,
Helped by merriment and song
When the horny-handed built her
Through the winter drab and long.

L'ENVOI.

Here's a toast, Endeavour gallant:
May good fortune come to you
And the card of Mrs. Hoskins
Do its part to see you through!
Should you cop the long-sought mug, miss,
We would be, if we could choose,
There in Mrs. Hoskins' tavern
When old Portsmouth gets the news!

More Important He Becomes, Less Time He Has for Fishing

By Robert Quillen

A certain young man named Bill made a resolution to be somebody and called on the god of success to ask assistance.

"Glad to help you," said the god. "Just go about your business as usual and I will send you hunches now and then so you can take advantage of the breaks."

Bill followed the hunches as they came and at once began to make progress.

Soon he was foreman of the plant and was offered a share of the business. In five years he was chairman of the board of directors.

Times were good and Bill decided to expand. He bought mines and forests to supply raw material and railroads to haul it. He absorbed a few banks to simplify his financing. His employes numbered thousands.

Then his fellow citizens began to draft him for public service. He was made governor of his State. He was sent to foreign lands on important missions and collected medals by the dozen. He became the chief influence in his party and the power behind the throne.

At 47 he was the most conspicuous success of his generation. He had wealth beyond measure; his palace was filled with treasures; all that money could buy was his. And all men considered him a wonder.

Then the nation celebrated his birthday and he stood on a reviewing stand to watch the parade that honored him. Banners waved; bands blared; millions cheered.

At Bill's elbow stood the god of success.

"Well, old man," said the god, "you've done pretty well. Anything else you want?"

"Yes," sighed Bill, "there is. I want a wife as sweet and affectionate as my chauffeur's, a fine head of hair like my office boy's, teeth like my stenographer's and a sound stomach like my janitor's."

"I'm sorry," said the god, "but those things are reserved as consolation for the people you call failures."

to get the means for fighting against adversaries or neighboring countries."

Digested as "Hands Off."

This, the manifesto, contended, "endangers peace."

Yokoyama's manifesto was in explanation of a statement last week by a Tokyo foreign office spokesman that help to China that might become a political aid would be opposed by Japan. The statement was variously interpreted in other capitals as a "hands-off-China" or a "Monroe Doctrine" policy.

Today's declaration argued that the help of foreign powers to China may be harmful and added: "Japan wishes to affirm its firm will to assume responsibility for peace in eastern Asia in close collaboration with the Asiatic powers, notably China, in warning Chinese leaders or foreigners against the danger of enterprises which favor the fermentation of internal or external trouble.

"The Monroe Doctrine is not very clear as to just what it means"—a reference to the linking of that doctrine and the restated Japanese policy.

"Countries like Siam and the Philippines," Yokoyama said, should be considered as participating in the responsibilities for peace in the Far East. The statement insisted that Japan respects the sovereignty of China "where all friendly peoples can pursue peaceful commerce."

Yokoyama, replying to questions, said the doctrine was directed against no particular country.

"We have no intention of dictating a policy to China, but do not want aid to be employed unwisely," he said.

Japan's "Policy of Peace."

"If armaments are sold to one party in China, it will be dangerous. Japan does not object to aid from the League of Nations if it is well employed, but we will warn the league we do not want it used against the policy of Japan, which is a policy of peace."

Listing the Asiatic countries to be collaborated with for the maintenance of peace, Yokoyama included Indian and the Dutch East Indies, as well as the Philippines and Siam, but explained he was referring to them as geographical divisions.

Asked if he considered Russia to be Asiatic, he replied: "It is half and half. We wish to collaborate with Russia."

Diplomatic representatives displayed intense interest tonight in the Japanese declaration.

"Secret Service Operator Thirteen."

The popular American novelist Robert W. Chambers, whose recent death was felt as a personal loss by hundreds of thousands, had completed a novel which has just been published under the title "Secret Service Operator Thirteen." When I saw that this was a story of a spy in the American Civil War, I did not think it would be particularly interesting; but after I had read three pages I was a prisoner, and knew no release till I had finished the book. It is a wildly exciting, thrilling narrative; and although it is told in a manner so romantic that one feels that the coincidences were arranged by the author rather than by God, it is none the less enthralling. For whatever may have been the limitations of Mr. Chambers' art, he was a born Tusitala—that is to say, a teller of tales. He knew how to invent an exciting yarn, and he knew how to tell it. This novel is a succession of thrills.

Apart from the exciting events in the story, I learned a good deal about the terrific riots in New York during the attempt to enforce the draft in 1863. I had read history books about this, but had a vague idea of what actually happened. But the picture given in this novel by Mr. Chambers is so vivid that one will never forget it. I recommend the book to all readers who are in search of something that will make them forget for a time all their troubles.

Furthermore, there are Negro spirituals that to me, at least, are new. The one at the end of the book, in its dramatic intensity, is overwhelming.

His first books, in the nineties, attracted attention immediately, especially "The King in Yellow." He must have written more than 50 novels.

Sheriff's Post Kept Vacant to Save Funds

Morgantown, W. Va., April 23 (Spl.).—Prompted by need of additional economies, the Monongalia County Court has decided to do away with the office of sheriff for the present and not to name a successor to Sheriff Charles T. Hickman, who died suddenly recently. Plans have been made to have the work carried on by his deputies.

No successor will be named at least until the end of the current fiscal year, and, if the plan works out, none will be named until the fall election when, under the law, a successor must be chosen by the voters.

Rural Newspaper Code Chief Probes Charges

Baltimore, April 23 (Spl.).—Charges of unfair competition by publishers of several country newspapers in Maryland are to be investigated by P. G. Stromberg, administrator of the rural newspaper code in Maryland.

Laundry Owner Silent Since Slaying Arrest

Charleston, W. Va., April 23 (Spl.).—Maintaining silence since he was arrested Saturday, Herbery C. Harrison, South Charleston laundry operator, was bound over to the grand jury on a charge of shooting to death Constable A. Ross Hager, when he refused to speak at his arraignment today.

Hager was slain while taking Harrison to jail following the laundry operator's arrest on a peace warrant. Magistrate G. C. Finney ordered Harrison held in the county jail.

No End of Books

By Theodore Hall

DON'T let the silly blurb which Reynal Hitchcock has given Count Wilczek's memoirs, "Gentleman of Vienna" ($5) deter you from reading a book of distinct and genuine old-world charm. Wrote the inspired blurbist: "If you could choose for yourself the pattern and span of your own life, and could include—being born an aristocrat—knowing none but the most charming of people—dwelling only in the most beautiful of surroundings—encountering adventure with just the right touch of danger to give spice to life without unduly risking it—enjoying the best of health, the best of food, and the best of wines—your life would be like that of Count Wilczek, &c."

THEO. HALL.

Which is a piece of pompous exaggeration the good count would have scorned. He was assuredly aristocratic and fortunate, but he didn't gloat. When he met a personage of note, he would write something like this: "I had the honor to make the acquaintance of the gracious and amiable ——." There's a world of difference.

* * * *

Count Wilczek was both a fine flower of the old Austrian regime and an extraordinary man in his own right. Privy councilor, chamberlain to visiting royalty, associated closely with all the great families of central Europe, he was also the kind of a man who breakfasted on a beefsteak and a bottle of red wine, and who invariably slept, until he was 66, on the floor with a rug over him. He thought nothing of buying one more ruined castle and restoring it—the famous castle of Kreuzenstein, over which he labored for 30 years, is lovingly described in detail. Yet with all that wealth and power, he enlisted as a private in the Ninth Jagers Regiment and fought against Prussia in the Bohemian campaign of 1866. He loved burgundy wine, stained glass, and hunting for boar, stag, bear, ibex and chamois; he was very much the mateur, and the sporting gentleman. Yet he backed and accompanied too serious scientific expeditions to the Arctic, from one of which he had to return on foot across Siberia. Even at the age of 76 he organized a great Austrian expedition to the South Pole, but the World War the next year prevented it.

* * * *

Wilczek was a friend of Franz Liszt, Alexander Dumas, Emperor Franz Joseph, Kaiser Wilhelm and Emperor Napoleon III. The Empress Eugenie, on a visit to Salzburg, made him guide her up a steep and dangerous cliff; he got well scolded by the Austrian court, but she was delighted and gave him her gloves as a memento.

He took King Victor Emmanuel II hunting and was annoyed because the King forebade anyone to eat until the end of the day. That was the royal Italian's own custom. Then he would make up for his fast—"a big haunch of venison or a whole ham was nothing to him!"

Wilczek could talk back frankly to royalty or jump over dining room tables. He was very fond of doing both. His greatest jump, of which he was pardonably proud, occurred when he was climbing a cliff over the Teufels-see after a chamois. He got to a point where he couldn't climb any farther, nor could he descend. There was nothing to do but to jump into the water with pack and rifle, which he did—180 feet down.

* * * *

He had known Wilhelm I and Bismarck; during the World War, Wilhelm introduced him to Von Hindenburg. "Here you see the famous Count Wilczek," said the Kaiser jocosely, "who in the year 1866 fired so many shots at us that he won the gold medal you can see in his buttonhole."

Von Hindenburg shook Wilczek's hand warmly. "Well," he remarked, "I fired back at you many times, then, but now, thank God, we are good friends. That war of 1866 was a noble affair, when two finely tempered blades crossed each other. In the war of 1870 we pulled the overweening Frenchman by the ears, but the present war is an ugly one and many of our old military traditions are passing entirely away." More than that was vanishing.

* * * *

At the age of 84, lying in bed from an old attack of dysentery in his castle at Seebarn, Wilczek dictated these memoirs to his daughter. He died quietly the next January.

But the picture he left us, of a stately, ordered life which grows more and more remote, is one to enjoy and linger over.

Box-Office Champions for March Are Announced—Richmond Lifts Ban on Drama

Contrasts Are Marked in New Public Choices

Current Hit Leads List; Actor Haunt Hotels; Theater Chat.

Reprinted from yesterday's last edition.

By Nelson B. Bell.

Some mildly surprising ratings are divulged in the list of motion picture "Box-Office Champions for March," as determined by the Motion Picture Herald's monthly check of the actual box-office statements of the key cities of the country.

The race for placement among the one-two-three ratings is considerably closer than usual. Only the undisputed leader, occupying first place, stands alone. Two pictures are tied for second place and three are deadlocked for third.

Completely corroborating Washington's estimate of its entertainment worth, the M. P. Herald's audit gives first place to "It Happened One Night," Columbia's well-nigh flawless picturization of Samuel Hopkins Adams' story of "Night Bus," now appearing on the Metropolitan screen with Clark Gable and Claudette Colbert in the costellar roles.

Sharp Contrasts.

In the tie for second place are two pictures as widely separated in content and treatment as might well be—Paramount's film version of Alberto Casella's extraordinary play of "Death Takes a Holiday" and RKO-Radio's production of "Spitfire," adapted from the play "Trigger," by Lula Vollmer, in which Katharine Hepburn seems to this department to be flagrantly, if not hopelessly, miscast. "Spitfire" is current at RKO-Keith's.

Almost as much diversity exists among the three pictures running neck and neck in the third position. These are Fox's screen version of "David Harum," starring Will Rogers; Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's production of "Queen Christina," starring Greta Garbo, a holdover in popular appeal from February, and "Palooka," United Artists' rowdy comedy of the prize ring, featuring Jimmy Durante, Lupe Velez and Stuart Erwin.

Like "Queen Christina," the leader, "It Happened One Night," is a February favorite that has managed to maintain its leadership through another month of the box-offices' acid test.

One of our objections to "Spitfire" as a bit of realistic drama is that Miss Hepburn fails utterly to make both ends meet! I mean to say that it is difficult to harmonize Miss Hepburn's slightly uncouth dashing about in her bare feet with the meticulous permanence of the wave in her extremely modern and urban coiffure. And a feminine observer points out that a backwoods washwoman hardly would know anything about the carefully shirred puff sleeves that adorn all of Trigger Hicks' otherwise simple gingham gowns. Perhaps there is an unmentioned big city just over the next hill in "Spitfire"!

Richmond Surrenders!

In yesterday's dramatic department of The Sunday Post the suggestion was made that other cities have fared worse during the 1933-34 theatrical season—"thaterical" I believe the gentlemanly compositor made it read—than Washington. Richmond, Va., might have been cited as a specific example.

It is that helpful stentor, Mr. Ray Henderson, who points out that Katharine Cornell will break the nearly three-year drama-fast of the neighboring Virginia city on April 30 and May 1, when she presents Rudolf Besier's "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" and George Bernard Shaw's "Candida" in the National Theater in Richmond.

Not since 1931, when Maude Adams and Otis Skinner appeared in "The Merchant of Venice," has a spoken drama of flesh and blood been seen in the Virginia capital, except such productions as have been made by amateurs and jitney players.

That a city, noted in theatrical history for its love of the stage and for its important contributions to the theater, has permitted the drama to be exiled for so long has been a subject of widespread comment.

Citizens Revolt.

It is due only to the interest, the insistence and the untiring efforts of a group of Richmond citizens, Mr. Henderson tells us, that the ban has been lifted to permit Miss Cornell to bring living drama back to the city.

Prior to 1931, the large Acca Mosque offered refuge to traveling companies after the destruction by fire of the famous old Academy of Music, but when the city leased this auditorium for civic purposes there was written into the by-law permitting the municipality to rent the Mosque a clause which forbade the showing of motion pictures, vaudeville and drama, although by curious inadvertency opera, musical comedy, revue and burlesque were permitted to appear. Film theaters have consistently refused to book spoken drama.

The front-page announcement that the bars had been let down for Miss Cornell, needless to say, was the signal for a record-breaking deluge of advance orders for tickets.

The dramatic desks of the local press were occupied with social activities beyond their usual wont yesterday evening. In the apartment of Senator and Mrs. Byrnes in the Shoreham last evening at 7:30 a reception was tendered Frances Fuller, young Washington actress—by adoption—pleasantly remembered for sterling work opposite Gary Cooper in the film version of "One Sunday Afternoon," and with Roland Young, Laura Hope Crews and Elizabeth Patterson in Clare Kummer's comedy hit, "Her Master's Voice," seen on the National stage last season.

Also last evening, Manager Stephen E. Cochran of the National Theater spread an informal buffet supper in honor of the new personnel of the National Theater Players, whose season will be inaugurated a week from tonight, Monday, April 30, with first Washington presentations of the current Broadway hit, "The Pursuit of Happiness."

A pleasant time was had by all—so I hear.

Speaking of the National Theater Players, much has been said and a great deal written about the "graduates" of the company created by Panjandrum Cochran and the esteem in which they hold Washington. An instance of the case in point is to be found in the following excerpts from a letter from Leona Powers, last season's leading woman—and the season before, too—which I am graciously permitted to publish:

"Dear Steve: Have meant to write you before this, but now here it is almost the opening of your new season.

"I've had a grand season with 'Mary of Scotland.' To be both with the Guild and in the biggest hit in town is almost too good to be true.

"Here's all sorts of grand good wishes for the 'little season.' On Monday night I'll be on the Alvin stage, but my mind and heart will be there at the dear old National and there will be tears in my eyes I won't be able to hide.

"I shall miss Washington and all the old gang and the grand audiences, believe me. They've spoiled me, I'm afraid.

"I'm so happy that my good friend, Ruth Abbott, is to follow me—she is a dandy girl and a fine actress and as beautiful as I wish I were and I KNOW Washington will adore her.

"All I ask is that she leave one little patch of their affection for me. Because some day some season. I hope you're going to let me come back and play for you, if only for a week! I'd be very unhappy if I couldn't look forward to that.

"All the good luck and the big season you deserve.

"As ever,

"(Signed) LEONA."

There are probably former National Theater Players scattered all over the country from one coast to the other whose sentiments are the same as Miss Powers', even if not expressed. Mr. Cochran's "little season" these past nine years has been a peculiarly potent agency for sending its numerous participants on to bigger and better things in the theater.

Outcast Note.

And if you think you have become proficient at finding a needle in a haystack, try and find a vacant room in a Washington hotel!

I am given to believe that the members of the "Jig Saw" and "The Second Man" companies and the National Theater Players all are gnashing their teeth that they didn't have sufficient foresight to swipe the little hammocks out of the Pullman cars!

Now they know all about those initials, NRA—No Rooms Available!

"BILLY WATSON'S BEEF TRUST." Hirst-Lake production, starring Sliding Billy Watson, with the Six Rosebuds, Wilmer Horner, Helen Coyne, Marilyn King, Nora Murray, Frankie Moore, Edna Dee, Sunny Nash, Lew Devine, George Monford, Mickey Markwood, Johnnie Cooke, Fred Bishop and the Grey Brothers. Staged by Frank Bryant. Reviewed Sunday matinee by W. A. Whitney.

It is entirely immaterial this week that "Sliding" Billy Watson has nothing to do with the beef trust or that the Six Rosebuds are independent of Mr. Watson—the fact that both are on the bill is ample justification for the misleading title of the current attraction at Col. James J. Lake's emporium of epidermis and ebullience.

With the mathematical acumen of an Einstein, the good colonel has added together one comedian and six robust Amazons of more than ample proportions and made a total of one fast-moving, sprightly and hilarious show.

The titular ladies are six who have, for some three years now, combined their 1,594 pounds of talent in two effective numbers which, even if lacking something in grace and fluidity of motion, do pack a tremendous farcical wollop. Captained by Bobby Diamond, with a paltry 202 pounds, the Six Rosebuds—including Alice Murphy (210), Betty Prior (224), Florence Mann (253), Betty Bradford (255), and Mildred Monti (450)—steal the show.

Billy Watson leads off the roster of comics, which includes a single skit by George Monford and several more with Mickey Markwood and Lew Devine. To all of these gentlemen Johnnie Cooke is the principal straight man, assisted on occasion by Mr. Monford.

With Edna Dee, the titian-haired hot-cha sizzler, on the bill, there can be no question of where the honors should go—and she again garners them as she did a few short weeks back.

The performance is studded with good singers—Miss Frankie Moore, Nora Murray and Fred Bishop.

Next to the Wades, the Grey Brothers (Eddie and Sid), are the favorites in the long list of buck-and-wingers that have been paraded by Washington's favorit impresario.

The chorus is attractive and capable, with the "Carioca," "Starlight" and "Roman Slave Market" scenes outstanding.

A New Sorceress of the Nile

Having scored a distinct personal success as the Empress Poppaea in the spectacular Cecil B. De Mille picturization of "The Sign of the Cross," Claudette Colbert once more essays the role of an ancient siren in the titular character of Mr. De Mille's "Cleopatra," now in production. This, its producer confidently believes, will be hailed as his most pretentious undertaking to date. Miss Colbert, it would appear, will be a slightly demure sorceress.

Straight From the Studios

Wallace Beery and Clark Gable to Glorify Ghost Town; Charles Laughton as a Younger Henry VIII; Newsy Items From Film Capital.

By Edwin Schallert.

Hollywood, April 22—The ghost town will be immortalized. They still exist in the good old West. And while picture suggestions are being spun off that look acceptable for Wallace Beery and Clark Gable, this looks as if it might be pretty near right for the two stars. The film is to be adapted by Edwin Corle, who wrote "Mojave," and it is being taken from an original by Sam Marx and George Auerbach.

SPENCER TRACY

Interesting thing about this picture is that the action takes place during a single night. Furthermore, it may be the means of putting life into the old West as a locale for movies once again, especially if two such prominent stars as Beery and Gable are seen in it.

• • • •

Laughton to Continue.

From far-off England comes word that Charles Laughton will continue his adventures as that roistering monarch, Henry VIII, if present indications do not go awry. His film, "The Private Life of Henry VIII," was so popular that it must needs have a movie sequel. Only this sequel will show him as a younger Henry. In this version Merle Oberon will play Anne Boleyn.

What is most extraordinary is that Maurice Chevalier is being billed as Francis I, and Douglas Fairbanks, jr., as Charles V, the Holy Roman Emperor, while Flora Robson is to play Katherine of Aragon. Quite a combination of talent that.

Laughton is, of course, playing the father in "The Barretts of Wimpole Street."

• • • •

Tracy on Vacation.

Spencer Tracy, who hasn't seen New York town since he quit the stage, is on a trip back there. He left last night. He will also stop over in Chicago. His plan is to see all the shows in town. From all indications, Loretta Young will be a lonely girl during the absence, even though kept busy in a picture.

Tracy played in New York in "The Last Mile" before coming to the coast. The intention is that on his return he will appear in the film "Marie Galante."

• • • •

Minute Mysteries.

Something worth watching for will be so-called "minute mystery plays." They will be one-reel thrillers.

Even short-film making seems to be steadily switching to the West Coast. Heretofore, a goodly proportion of these pictures have been made in the East, but the current trend appears to mean the transferring of this type of production here. Columbia is to make its "Minute Mysteries," so-called, out in Hollywood. The first two that will enter production include "Murder Madness" and "The Stolen Pearls." They are being arranged for the screen by Harold Shumate, and directed by Lambert Hillyer.

Three Aids At Embassy Plan Party

French Diplomats Send Dance Invitations for May 3.

British Envoy Entertains Miss Alice Davis and Fiance Tonight.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

With the pleasures of the ball given recently at the Italian Embassy still fresh in memory, Capital society is again humming in anticipation of another smart embassy dance to be given Thursday evening, May 3, by the Counselor of the French Embassy, Mr. Jules Henry; the Second Secretary of the Embassy, Mr. Claude de Boisanger, and the Attache of Embassy and Countess de Leusse.

The dance will be given at Mrs. Curtis' Club, at 1925 F street, that delightful rendezvous of the smart set, and will be preceded by a dinner party for a chosen group invited by the hosts of the dance.

Numerous other parties are being arranged, and the prospect of so gay an evening has completely waived the usual quiet of the spring season in Washington.

British Envoy Host.

Usually dances and balls given by members of the Diplomatic Corps fall earlier in the season and society devotes itself to smaller and more informal gatherings in the spring, but this year, with the Italian ball postponed from the original date of March 3 until April 7, because of the death of King Albert of Belgium, hosts discovered that delightful times can be had by appropriating terraces, gardens and patios.

The Ambassador of Great Britain and Lady Lindsay will entertain at a small dance this evening in honor of Miss Alice Davis, eldest daughter of the former Secretary of War, Mr. Dwight F. Davis, and her fiance, Mr. Roger Makins, Second Secretary of the British Embassy.

The wedding will take place next Monday at the winter home of Mr. Davis in Florida, and Mr. Makins and his bride will sail early in May for England, where the former will report to the foreign office before proceeding to his new post as second secretary of the British Legation in Oslo, Norway. The young couple will make their home in Oslo.

Wedding Rites at Church.

Miss Davis is well suited to be the bride of a career diplomat as she has acted as hostess for her distinguished father in his official homes for several years since her mother's death, and before that when the late Mrs. Davis was ill.

The wedding, which will take place in the church near the Davis estate, will be simple, and will be attended by a number of close friends from Washington and many of Mr. Davis' neighbors in the South.

The bride will be attended by her two sisters, Miss Cynthia Davis and Miss Helen Davis, and Mr. Makins will have as his best man Mr. Richard Heathcoat-Amory, of England. Miss Davis will leave Washington on Thursday for the South and the others of the bridal party will leave the end of the week.

Tomorrow evening the former United States Ambassador to Argentina and Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss will entertain at a dinner, followed by dancing in their beautiful Georgetown home, for Miss Davis and Mr. Makins.

May Day Fair To Offer Book By First Lady

Newspaper Women's Club Places Autographed Copy on Display.

"It's Up to the Women," written by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, is among the autographed books to be offered on the book stand at the May Day Street Fair, to be conducted May 1 by the Newspaper Women's Club of Washington in the National Press Club auditorium. The fair will benefit the milk fund for undernourished children of Washington and will start a fellowship fund for women members of the newspaper profession.

Among other autographed volumes donated to the fair by the authors will be a copy of "Scamper," by Anna Roosevelt Dall, daughter of President and Mrs. Roosevelt; "Oil for the Lamps of China," by Alice Tisdale Hobart, of Washington; "Mesa Land," by Anna Wilmarth Ickes, wife of Secretary Ickes; "Tales of a Russian Grandmother," by Frances Carpenter Huntington, of Washington; "Kees and Kleintje," the latest of a number of popular juvenile stories by Marian King, of Washington; "Crowded Hours," by Alice Longworth, and "Marlowe's Daughter," by Frances Parkinson Keyes, wife of Senator Henry W. Keyes, of New Hampshire. There also will be an autographed novel by Mary Robert Rinehart.

A large collection of miscellaneous volumes not autographed, donated by a number of Washingtonians also will be offered. Mounted photographs of favorite authors, scenes of literary significance and a large cartoon, depicting the famous Teddy Bear in the role of an harassed librarian, by Mr. Clifford K. Berryman, will be displayed.

Large screens, loaned by the public library and decorated especially for the occasion by members of the art staff of the Library will farm a setting for the books booth.

Mrs. Sarah G. Bowerman, in charge of the booth, will be assisted by Mrs. Georgia Knox Berry, Washington correspondent of the Nashville Tennessean, and Mrs. Edward Vosbury, of Fairfax, Va.

That Out-Door Look Banished By New Cream

This and Its Complement, Muscle Oil, Made of Herbal Juices.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

YOUTH-GIVING elements of herbal juices, extracts from rare plants, and primary vitamins are the ingredients of a new cleansing cream.

An internationally known beauty specialist has just returned from one of her periodic stays in Europe where she collaborated with a group of dermatologists and scientists to formulate her new preparation.

In speaking of it she said it was a "triumph of modern beauty science." She further said the cream not only does a remarkable clean-up job, but refreshes hungry tissues. Sallow, weathered faces respond promptly to its magic by taking on a delightful transparency and velvetiness. Chapped hands, arms, and roughened elbows are smoothed and softened. And fatigue lines miraculously disappear.

Complementary to her herban cream she also presents an herban muscle oil composed of "provitamins and tonic elements." Summing up its qualifications she declares it restores to the skin the vital substances depleted by modern dieting. Its contents seep into the pores, get at the root of relaxed or flabby tissues and imbedded lines, tauten drooping muscles and restores a youthful contour. She especially recommends it for women whose work or worries give their faces a strained look.

Because madam is a leading beauty authority, and has worked long and laboriously over her new products, her public has learned to respect both her preparations and words of beauty wisdom.

Cocktails Over Flowers.

Wire arrows form the unique decoration around the base of a new coffee table. A clear glass top, and white wire adapt the table to any light room or porch, and make it appropriate for summer use. A Washington hostess who recently purchased one plans to use hers with a basket of flowers underneath —and serve her coffee, or cocktails over a flower background.

An ash tray perched on arrow legs makes an attractive smoking stand to use with the table.

* * * *

Recommended Desk Set.

There are lots of household odds and ends housewives would like to have. But the budget, beastly old budget, raises a hue and cry. Lately, though, it has been conspicuously silenced by the sale at a downtown shop, where brass pitchers, lamps and bowls are all drastically reduced.

One of the smartest and most useful items is the desk set, formerly $3, and now $1.95. It includes a large blotter with the metal corners, letter opener, small round blotter, inkwell and letter holder.

* * * *

And Further Variations.

Fingernail polishes in dozens of new and daring shades are going to be popular throughout the summer, says an old dealer in manicure materials.

Probably she's right. For the dazzling, fancy shades she has put on the market are difficult to ignore.

There's the deep auburn mahogany, for brown, yellow and white. An ox-blood tint for black, white and gray. And a shiny jewel-like onyx to complete black and white ensembles.

This may be most strikingly set off by a little of her white pearl polish applied to the tip of the nails.

Caution, however, warns the dealer. Don't try to be conspicuous in sport or afternoon wear. Use the polishes freely and dashingly with cocktail dresses, evening frocks and bathing suits.

And why not be real chi-chi and use these gypsy tints on the tip of the toes? With brown legs and sandaled feel they give the ultra touch!

Wrap in Celophane.

The simplest gifts may be strikingly enhanced with a few perky touches. Who should know better than the proprietor of a gift shop?

And how bettter to give the smart touch than by cellophane ribbon?

There are yards of it in a local shop in all colors. After it's wound around a neatly wrapped package it can be cut in tiny tassels or tied in a stiff bow-knot.

There's a striking spool in black and silver which lends itself to a number of original wrappings.

* * * *

Way, Way Down.

The prohibitive price of catlin initials is down with the advent of those in a local shop which sell for 35 cents.

The square, flat cut of these adapts them beautifully to the tailored handbag. They're available in brown, red, navy and white.

* * * *

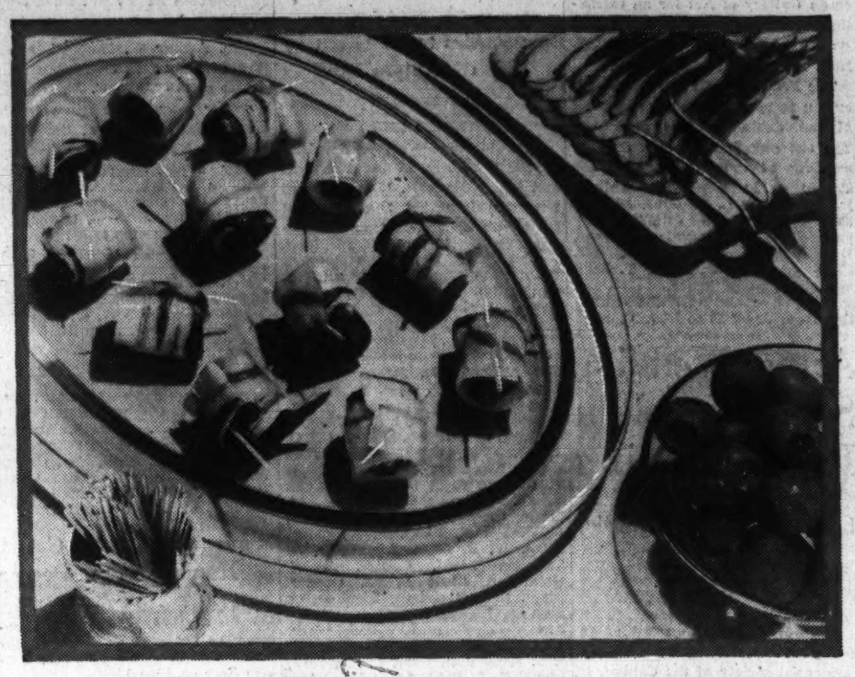
Adaptable Favorites.

Some rose beige Venetian bags in a local shop are tooled in all colors, in intricate, dizzying designs.

They're general favorites for several reasons. Their variety of color suits them to any costume. Their materials are durable. They can be carried in spring to blend with bright printed frocks, and be equally useful in the fall to set off dark suits.

Call Ruth Anne Davis, of The Washington Post, NA 4205, Extension 105, for further information. Or write, inclosing stamped, addressed envelope.

Bacon Used to Culinary Advantage On Morning, Noon and Night Menus



Olives Wrapped in It Are Grand for Cocktail Appetizers.

By Ann Barrett.

Stuffed olives are twice as alluring to Joan Crawford when they're wrapped up in bacon and broiled. Will Rogers wouldn't think of ordering eggs without bacon. Then there's liver and bacon, beans and bacon, greens and bacon, fried apples and bacon.

Bacon-Olive Tantalizers.

Choose the largest stuffed olives you can find, wrap a strip of bacon around each, fasten with toothpicks and bake on a rack in a shallow pan at 400 F. Or broil 6 or 7 inches from flame, about 3 minutes on each side. These make a fine appetizer with cocktails.

Liver and Bacon Loaf.

Here's liver and bacon in a baked loaf that's good served cold on picnics. For this, get 1 pound of beef liver and cook it tender with ½ teaspoon salt in 2 cups boiling water. Then remove skin and membrane and grind or chop fine. Next, cook ¾ cup fine, soft bread crumbs in 1 cup of bouillon or broth to make a paste. Mix this into chopped liver with 2 eggs (slightly beaten with fork), 2 tablespoons grated onion, ¼ teaspoon salt, 3 tablespoons lemon juice. Finally, line a loaf pan with strips of raw bacon (about ½ pound), turn in the liver mixture, and bake in moderate oven (350 F.) about 1 hour.

Bacon and Bread Hash.

First fry 6 strips of bacon, then chop this up and drain all fat from pan except 1 tablespoon. Into this fat put 1 cup minced celery and ¼ cup minced onion. Cook slowly till tender. Then turn this into a bowl with chopped bacon; 4 cups soft, fine bread crumbs; 1 teaspoon poultry seasoning, 1 egg, ¼ teaspoon salt, ⅛ teaspoon pepper. Mix lightly but thoroughly, adding just enough milk or bouillon to hold mixture together. Brown the hash in 2 tablespoons bacon fat.

Bacon Sauce for Spaghetti.

For this, first fry 6 strips of bacon and chop fine. Then leave 5 tablespoons of bacon fat in pan, and slowly cook ¼ cup minced onion in this. Then blend in 3 tablespoons flour, and slowly pour in 2 cups strained tomato juice, stirring constantly till thickened. Then add 1 tablespoon vinegar, 1 teaspoon sugar, 2 tablespoons minced parsley, salt, pepper and cayenne pepper to taste. Drop in a section of garlic and cook slowly 5 minutes. Then remove garlic and serve over spaghetti with grated cheese.

Corn and Bacon Pudding.

Into 2 cups whole-grain canned corn (not cream style) mix 1 egg (slightly beaten with fork), ¾ cup rich milk, ½ teaspoon salt and ⅛ teaspoon pepper. Then mix 1 cup fine, soft crumbs with ¼ cup melted bacon fat and ¼ teaspoon paprika. Put corn mixture and crumbs into greased baking dish in layers. Top with 4 strips of bacon, and bake at about 350 F., about 25 minutes (or until bacon is browned).

Upstanding Elizabethan Collars High Enough to Tickle Ears

By Amos Parrish.

NEW YORK, April 24.—It's neck and neck . . . and then still more neck . . . in spring fashion. And the neck which isn't surrounded by some flutter or ripple or starchy crispness is rare, indeed.

It's a practical fashion as well as a flattering one. Yet you make all manner of changes to one dress.

This is a feminine fashion season, so all kinds of frilly, ruffly neckwear is in fashion. And for most women frills and ruffles about the throat are one of the most flattering things they can put on.

Queen Elizabeth had nothing on today's pleated and ruffled ruffs. In fact, modern ones are more becoming because they're softer and more comfortable and less exaggerated.

Organdie, mousseline and taffeta make most of them and they are very gay and very youthful. You can see one type in the sketch at the lower right in the illustration.

Pierrot ruffles, which don't stand up as high as the ruffs, are another soft, youthful neckline finish, while jabots of organdie or mousseline trimmed with fine lace are becoming to almost any one. And one of these is sketched at the upper right.

You can do all sorts of things with ruffling by the yard, too, letting it follow the closing line of your dress, as in the sketch at the lower left.

But you don't have to be ruffly and frilly all the time to be smart. Tailored neckwear is important, too. And for this, pique and linen are the big favorites.

Wide, tailored revers, such as shown in the upper left sketch can be used on either a dress or a suit. Ascot scarfs are classics and plastrons and gilets can be used to cover completely the front of the dress.

Tailored monograms are a smart idea for scarfs or gilets. And the center sketch shows how one is used on an Ascot.

Neckwear of the types described are available in Washington in the better shops and department stores.

The Ohio State University Alumni Club gave its annual dinner dance last evening at the Admiral. The rooms were decorated with pennants and spring flowers. Those in the receiving line were Mrs. Isreal M. Foster, wife of Judge Foster, president of the club; Mrs. Renich Dunlap, Mrs. J. F. Kendrick, and Mrs. Kenneth Demaron.

Mrs. Arthur G. Learned, of Stamford, Conn., is in town on one of her frequent visits here, and she is stopping at the Wardman Park Hotel for about a week.

Mr. and Mrs. James Hammond, of Memphis, Tenn., are at the Carlton for a few days. Mr. Hammond is publisher of the Commercial Appeal.

Miss Dorothea D. Lawrence, of New York City, who is in town for a visit of ten days, is occupying a suite at the Wardman Park Hotel during her stay.

Dr. and Mrs. Charles M. Andrews, of New Haven, Conn., have arrived in Washington and are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. John Walker Holcombe.

What Today Means

"Taurus"

If April 24 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9:15 to 11:15 a. m., from 2:15 to 4:15 p. m. and from 7:15 to 9:15 p. m. The danger periods are from 6:15 to 8:15 a. m., from 5:15 to 7:15 p. m. and from 10:15 p. m. until 12:15 a. m.

You probably will meet on this date, either socially or in business, an individual who some time ago irritated you considerably. Do not allow this meeting to reawaken latent thoughts of resentment, which might be discernible by any action on your part. It will be wise to "let by-gones be by-gones."

If a woman and born on April 24, you have all the qualifications essential for a successful housekeeper, or required by a woman who has to meet the public in the capacity of a department manager, receptionist or hostess. Whether it is in your home or in the commercial world, it will prove good policy to always maintain a considerate and gracious manner towards everyone with whom you are thrown into contact.

The child born on April 24, when old enough, must be made to understand the wrong of holding a grudge against any of its playmates, as a result of some childish quarrel. Teach it to say whatever it has to regarding an issue, and do all the arguing that is to be done at the time of the dispute. Discourage any tendency to harbor angry thoughts. Impress on the child that a great deal of real courage is required to acknowledge being in the wrong, but it is always the right and brave thing to do. The respect that such an action gains, more than compensates for the temporary humiliation that is felt when one has to admit a mistake.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. W. A. Evans.

The Nails.

The nails are arrangements of dead skin hardened, fabricated, and located so as to protect the exposed ends of the fingers and toes. The lower animals, and especially the wild ones, have many needs for protection of certain parts and, in consequence, they have horns as well as hooves and, not infrequently, they are provided with horny skin structures in unusual parts of the body. Man rarely needs protection for other areas besides the ends of his fingers and toes.

Being inanimate structures, the nails stand much abuse and rarely are harmed by the experiences to which they are subject. But they do have some disorders. They are, sometimes poisoned by dyes and cosmetics used on them. They are harmed by too much pushing back and trimming of the cuticle. Unless the work done is damaging, neglected nails are generally of a better quality and freer from disorders than those regularly and overly manicured.

The nails may be poisoned by chemicals to which they are exposed as a part of the day's work. Photographers, workers in chemicals, surgeons, and scrubwomen are likely to have bad nails.

Beliefs About Sleep Blasted by Doctor

Eight Hours Enough for Average, He Says.

Chicago, April 23.—Eight hours sleep is more than the average person needs, in the opinion of Dr. Nathaniel Kleitman, of the University of Chicago.

Other familiar ideas concerning sleep were contradicted by Dr. Kleitman when he addressed members of the American College of Physicians yesterday.

Contrary to popular belief, the soundest slumber takes place 10 minutes after a person has retired and not just before dawn, declared the doctor.

Here are some more facts advanced by Dr. Kleitman: Too much warmth does not lead to restful slumber; most persons reach the peak of their efficiency shortly before noon; some reach the peak as late as 6 p. m.

The person who has been drinking liquor is likely to sleep soundly the first part of the night, but he may have a case of jitters when that first sleep has dissipated itself, declared Dr. Kleitman. He added that while eight hours sleep a night is required by few persons, everyone should take that amount "because sleep is a pleasure."

Eye to Eye.

By Katherine Smith.

Eye to eye, and heart to heart,
We've sung
Of love—the hands that sheltered mine
Were wildly young.

Now the eyes are dull, the hearts
Are cold—
The hands you lift to touch my hair
Are not too old.

BACHELOR—of ARTS

By John Erskine

The Story So Far.

In this latest novel of John Erskine's he writes about the scene he knows best—youth and love in college life, and the making of a man in a crashing world.

Alec, so nicknamed as a joke because his last name was Hamilton, was the son of a well-to-do manufacturer. The first half of Alec's sophomore year at Columbia saw the crash of his world. He had been just an average boy—a student without distinction, a scrub sportsman, and a failure as a glee club tenor. He had fallen in love at first sight, gotten into debt, been pampered by his family, and then discovered his father's financial ruin.

John Erskine's heroine is a lovable, red-headed student named Mimi, a modern, independent, straight-shooting youngster. Both students and at least one professor fell in love with her, and she fell for Alec. There was also Gladys, the blonde college widow, who had marked Alec for slaughter. Two other vital characters were Prof. Barth and his young wife, who taught Alec something of life. The tragedy of Neal, a boy who had to die, also left its imprint on the boy's character.

Broke and faced with the possibility of having to leave college, Alec finally found a job in a restaurant. There he suffered the humiliation of waiting on the girl he loved, accompanied by Prof. Woolsey, his strongest rival. In bitter rebellion he dashed back to the fraternity house and took on, for that evening, the job of a gigolo. Mimi learns of this escapade and throws him over. Alec is filled with grief when Mrs. Barth dies. He reaches his junior year, and his sisters visit him.

"Oh, here you are! Wally's coming, and Tom, and I've left word for Ed."

"He's mine, that last one!" said Laura. "Aren't you sure of him?"

Beatrice interrupted, waving at the gallery. "Did you have to study with all these?"

"Do I look it? Come on back and prink up! The procession starts at 6:30, and I want you to knock 'em cold!"

Wally got there on time, Tom a minute late. Alec felt once more that Wally some day would be a great man—he had such a direct approach. The way he shook hands with the girls, for instance.

"Awfully glad to meet you! Which one has taken a fancy to me?"

"If you must know," said Beatrice, "it's me! I intended to be maidenly, but I see you wouldn't appreciate it."

"Now we're talking!" Wally sat down carefully on a weak-backed chair next to her end of the sofa.

There were no other preliminaries, so far as Alec could observe. And he had thought himself masterful, the night he met Mimi!

Tom's entrance, Alec was glad to see, had a good deal of Binghamton decorum, a subdued reticeence. The contrast to Wally's vigor was fortunate.

Approves Good Taste.

"Awfully glad to meet you both! Your brother and I are pretty thick, and he talks of you a lot!"

Good taste, Alec thought—just right.

"Well, children, shall we eat?"

Wally and Beatrice walked ahead, with Laura following between Tom and her brother—Tom trying to be sociable.

"I suppose you've seen New York before?"

"Well—Trenton isn't so far, you know!"

That wasn't so good! Alec tried to recall what Tom's line of talk had been with the Whistles, before they got to the necking.

At the Gold Rail he had reserved the table at the southeast end. Just after the cocktails had been brought Weinstein came through the door looking for them. Alec stood up and waved.

"Here you are—we kept a place! Swell you could come! My sister Beatrice—my other sister Laura—I mean, I ought to do it the other way! This is Mr. Edward Weinstein. Sit there, next to Laura."

This was the first time Alec had seen the dark-haired classmate elsewhere than in the classroom, or the history seminar, or Barth's home, or beside Bertha's carriage. Now with these two girls the courtly manner turned to brilliant account. Alec once more felt a little crude, and wished that he and Tom and Wally had cultivated a more subtle line of talk, something natural without being monotonous.

Laura Likes Weinstein.

Laura liked Weinstein. Even Beatrice glanced away from her saxophone player now and then to hear what Eddie was saying, till Wally would demand her attention again, and get it. No catching him off guard! But Laura could answer Ed in his own style—they belonged together.

Alec could see that Tom felt out of it—he felt a little so himself. Those two, both of them with that black hair! Her gray eyes, her whiteness—and his olive skin! Gosh, they were a picture! Something had happened, Alec was sure, a stroke of fate, right there at the table, right in the crowded restaurant.

Afterward they saw a picture. Alec was for the Nemo, but Weinstein asked the girls if they'd seen Radio City. Alec was annoyed, not to think of it himself. They took a taxi to the Music Hall, and marveled at the corridors, and at the ushers, and at the comfortable seats, and at the dancing girls, and the many-lighted ceiling, and the spectacle, and the organ playing. Alec, left to himself, would have shown them the good old Nemo!

After the show Weinstein had them up on the roof to marvel at the city by night, and when they came down he dated them up for the next evening.

"We'll dine at my house, and to a show."

"There are a lot of us," said Alec. "Are your parents out of town?"

Weinstein laughed. "They're at home, but patient."

Beatrice Insists.

"I'm not sure I can come," said Wally.

"You must!" said Beatrice.

"In that case——" said he.

Alec remembered the Weinstein butler.

"It's dinner coat, I suppose?"

"Any way you like."

"But don't you dress?"

"Well, said Eddie, "since we're going to a show, I suppose it's a black tie."

Weinstein never talked about himself, nor about his parents, but the travel years which he had enjoyed suggested wealth. Alec expected a comfortable house, like his father's, in good times. He was astonished when they came to the formidable house just west of Lexington, and found themselves in a palace or a museum. He had the impression at once, before his coat was off and in the hands of the butler, that every stick of furniture, even the chairs, were from some points of view a work of art. The Weinsteins went in for paintings. There were some modern things in the hall, but on the wide staircase, in the spacious living room, the pictures had the tone of age.

Mrs. Weinstein was tall, olive-skinned, like her son. Alec thought he had sent her portrait somewhere, then remembered how pictures of the Madonna frequently wear that thoughtful, slightly sad, expression. Mr. Weinstein was shorter than his wife, and perhaps was conscious of the fact. When he greeted his son's guests, Alec thought him for a moment a little stiff, but before the dinner had progressed he knew the stiffness was an unusual sensitiveness. He might have known it from the man's lips, and from his eye, melancholy but alert.

"This is swell of you, Mrs. Weinstein, to take in the whole regiment at once!"

Talks About Baby.

"I confess to great curiosity! We wanted to see you all, but particularly you! I told Ed you must know more about babies than he does, or that poor Barth child wouldn't survive."

"Why, Ed's fine with Bertha! As a matter of fact, we leave her strictly alone. If she didn't sleep all the time I don't know what we'd do."

Mrs. Weinstein turned to the girls. "Have you seen this nursing team at work?"

"Net yet." Laura took the question to herself. "The boys promise an exhibition tomorrow — they wouldn't show off today."

"That was Barth," explained Ed. "He wheeled Bertha out himself because you girls were visiting Alec. Isn't that like him, father?"

Mr. Weinstein smiled.

"Do you know him, sir?"

"Quite well. But I wish we saw more of him. I can never express my gratitude for what he has meant to my son. What a noble life!"

"Are you to be a teacher?" asked Mrs. Weinstein.

Alec was caught off his guard. "Me? Gracious, no!"

His sisters laughed.

"I'm no scholar," he hastened to explain.

She seemed disappointed. "I should think you'd want to be!"

"Well, Ed's going into diplomacy," he countered, in instinctive self-defense, "and I'll try for something practical, too."

"I wish Ed would be a teacher!"

"Maybe he will, mother," said her husband. "Ed hasn't found himself yet."

Those remarks on another occasion and at another table would have seemed to Alec mere domestic chatter, but now he caught meaning from them. These people, with their wealth and their culture, considered teaching important. The idea was new to him. His own father and his father's friends respected professors, but he never heard them desire one in the family. In the presence of Barth, who had no money, this Weinstein family were humble.

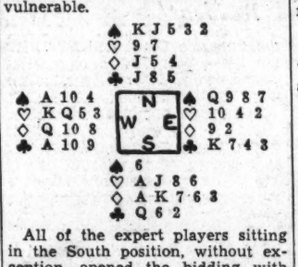
Expert vs. Tyro.

The following hand, played in a recent Howell Duplicate match, offers a striking illustration of the difference in the methods of expert and average players:

South, Dealer North and South vulnerable.



All of the expert players sitting in the South position, without exception, opened the bidding with one heart. There is a growing tendency among the more advanced players to bid a four-card major before a five-card minor, especially when vulnerable, on hands of this type, the purpose being to avoid reversing the suits, which automatically "crowds the bidding" and does not allow an early "sign off." When South bid one heart West sensibly decided to trap and therefore passed to await developments. North, of course, bid one spade, East passed and South bid two diamonds. West, still trapping, passed again and North did likewise. East's holding, of course, does not justify re-opening the bidding even on suspicion.

At those tables, however, where South followed the so-called orthodox bidding methods, he opened the bidding with one diamond. Over West's trap pass North bid one spade, East passed, and most of the South players now elected to bid two hearts. West figurately smacked his lips and passed, feeling sure that the bidding would proceed further. North at this point was in a dilemma. He decidedly could not stand a four-card heart suit, his spades would probably find no support in the South hand and were therefore too weak to rebid, so he had no option but to bid three diamonds. East and South passed, and West, rather disgruntled that the bidding had not reached dizzy heights and determined not to be bilked from a just reward for his previous restraint, doubled.

To make a bad contract worse, several of the South players proceeded to make an afrocious misplay on the hand. On the Opening lead of the Ace of clubs, a club continuation and a shift to trumps by East, these Declarers could not resist the temptation of a "free" diamond finesse and thereafter inevitably went down two tricks for a loss of 500 points. Those Souths, however, who were canny enough to handle the bidding in such a manner as to get no higher than two diamonds naturally made no such error in the play, and on a diamond lead by East promptly put up the Ace. A spade was now led, and West realized that he must play the Ace or probably lose it. Regardless of what lead he next made, the contract of two diamonds was assured, since he could not lead a trump without losing his Queen. South scored 90 points under the Howell system of scoring, which, compared with the 500-point penalty incurred by his less expert competitors, was highly satisfactory, and duly reflected in the final match-point score.

Housewives Look Homeward, Charms of Business Fade; But This Trend Won't Last

By Malvina Lindsay
Woman's Page Editor.

THE BACK-TO-THE-HOME movement is causing some uneasiness among women old enough to remember unpleasantly the kitchen indenture of their sex. And well it might. For nearly every visiting European proclaims domesticity is sweeping the feminine world, and it is only a matter of time until American women return to the halcyon housewifery of Italy and Germany.

Indeed the tea leaves seem to show some such dark man in the offing. Social movements are as contagious as measles and war, and the back-to-the-home germs would find just now some fertile psychological field in this country.

American women are not likely to be sent home by a Hitler or a Mussolini. (Let one try to do it!) They are not likely to return to the bearing and rearing of families of from 10 to 17 children as a patriotic duty. But they might yield—at least temporarily—to the beckoning charm of the House Opposite.

There Is a Wistfulness.

The feeling of "Is the sport worth the candle?" seems to be growing among women who are tired of the clangor of an alarm clock calling them to office or factory. The strain of a modern working woman's life, particularly if she is keeping house on the side—and more particularly if she is supporting an unemployed husband and several children—is causing a widespread wistfulness for the good old days when men battled alone with rent and grocery problems. In fact, it is quite possible if a St. George went galloping through the land promising every woman the security of a home and a wage-earning husband, the feminine vote would be turned over to him en masse.

Many of today's generation have a nostalgia for the sheltered life because they are not near enough to that life to know of its hardships and heartaches. Most of them think of the home as the gentle protectorate of the 70's, as described in romantic novels dealing with upper-class life of that period. Or, if they think of it in more modern terms, they visualize the electrical paradises of the gilded 20's.

Most of these women, however, in their confusion and discontent, think of the home as a haven from a chaotic and menacing world, as a "covert from the tempest," as the "shadow of a great rock in a weary land."

The World at Its Worst.

This sentiment probably has had as much to do in turning the faces of the women of Germany and Italy homeward as have nationalistic appeals or dictators' decrees. These women, particularly those of Germany, made their first venture into the world when it was at its worst. What more natural than they should willingly turn back?

Every human being these days would like to run home. American women may be caught in a stampede to infantilism and do this. But they will not remain at home any more than will the women of Germany or Italy. For returning home, they will find the world and all its problems has beat them to their hearthstones, and that there is no escaping the meeting of life on their own feet.

Women are not going back to the home to stay any more than the world is going back to 1926. Both are destined to be swept on in the resistless current of change.

Stars and Stripes Is Theme As Daughters of 1812 Meet

Delegates Pledge Allegiance to the Flag, Hear Maj. Gen. Malone Speak, Marine Band Plays and a Contralto Offers Selections.

"OUR FLAG" WAS the theme of last night's meeting of the forty-second council of the Daughters of 1812 held in the small ballroom of the Willard Hotel.

After the processional march by the United States Marine Band, the council was called to order by Mrs. Robert J. Johnston, National president. "Allegiance to the Flag" was pledged by the 200 delegates in an impressive ceremony led by Mrs. Reuben Ross Holloway, chairman.

Maj. Gen. Malone Speaks.

The address of the evening, which pertained to the flag, was given by Maj. Gen. Paul B. Malone. Other numbers on the program included a solo by Anne Yago, contralto; a group of cello selections by Delphine Besio, presentation of State flags and additional musical numbers by the Marine Band.

Morning sessions of the council were taken up with business meetings, registration of delegates and committee members.

In the afternoon a portrait of Col. Daniel Parke was presented to the mansion at Arlington, under the direction of Mrs. Frederick W. Matteson, chairman, and Gen. William E. Horton, presiding chairman.

Today's session will begin at 9 o'clock. Reports of charter trustees and National officers will be given in the morning, as well as announcements and presentations of the Carr Flag and the Weinmann Cup. Announcements of essay winners also will be given. At the close of this session candidates will draw for place of nomination.

Officers to Be Elected.

This afternoon nominations for National offices will be made from the floor and National chairman committee reports, State reports and announcements will be made.

A successor to Mrs. Johnston, president National, will be elected. Leading contenders for this office are Mrs. John Francis Weinmann, of Arkansas, and Mrs. J. Harris Baughman, of Louisiana. Mrs. Arthur Smith Isham is unopposed for first vice president. Mrs. Daniel Webster Snyder, of West Virginia and Mrs. Nicholas L. Dashiell, of Maryland, are candidates for second vice president.

Preceding the banquet at 7:30 o'clock tonight the National president and her cabinet will receive for an hour in the large ballroom of the Willard. The United States Marine Band will play and a musical program will be presented under the direction of Mrs. Gertrude Lyons, chairman of music, and president of the District of Columbia Federation of Music Clubs. Features of the program will include a chorus of twenty voices, dancers, and a male quartet.

The meeting will end with Wednesday's session.

No Quarrels In the Family Happen Here

Philadelphia, April 22 (Spl.). A marriage Utopia in which husbands and wives never quarrel has been found in the interior of Venezuela by Vincenzo Petrullo, University of Pennsylvania scientist.

Petrullo, field director for South American research, has returned from a nine-month tour of investigation among nomadic Indian tribes of Venezuela. He said he found the family life of the Yaruro tribe one of eternal harmony, harsh words never passed between husbands and wives and children never were scolded.

In this Utopia there are no bachelors nor old maids, as marriage is obligatory and strictly regulated.

"A man must marry the daughter of his mother's brother," said Petrullo, "but he is prohibited from marrying either the daughters of a sister of his mother or of a brother of his father. These girls he considers as sisters to himself and calls them by that title.

"Polygamy is practiced, a man marrying two sisters, but this can happen only if there are not enough men, or if a woman's husband dies. Then her brother-in-law is obligated to take care of her, although she must wait a year before marrying again."

Birth Certificates Issued Again After Citizens Deplore Lack

CHARLESTON, W. Va., April 23 (Spl.).—Officials of the Bureau of Vital Statistics in the State Department of Health announce that issuance of birth certificates will be resumed by the bureau as the result of widespread protests received from all over the State.

Issuance of the certificates was discontinued last fall by the State as one of numerous forced economy moves, which department officials now say was a mistake. Until that time the certificates were supplied by the Federal Census Bureau in cooperation with the State Government.

After the discontinuance, bureau officials state, a veritable flood of protests against the action poured in upon the bureau, these running into the thousands. The officials decided these protests were too numerous and too emphatic to be ignored.

Hereafter neatly engraved cards certifying the birth of infants, together with other family data, will be sent to parents of all newly born babes who are registered. Arrangements have also been made to supply the cards to the parents of babies born and registered during the period the cards were discontinued.

An average of between 100 and 150 of these cards go out daily to parents of the State, bureau officials say, and the total represents about 85 per cent of all children born in West Virginia. The cards facilitate the issuance of local birth certificates and are of value in registering for school, employment and like purposes.

If the Vice-President Were Only a Storekeeper, Mrs. Garner Says His Job Would Be Her Career

Tells of Arduous Duties as His Hard-Working Secretary.

A clearing house for women's interests is provided by The Washington Post in its feature series, "First Ladies of the Capital." Twice weekly, coast-to-coast radio audiences hear The Post's radio reporter converse intimately before the microphone with distinguished women in the Capital. The following day, the Woman's Page carries the interview in story form.

This interview with the Vice President's Lady is the sixth article in the series.

By Margaret Santry.

"IF MY husband were a storekeeper or a farmer—instead of Vice President—it would still be my career to try to help him make the best of that job."

Into the kitchenette flat in the Bronx, the rambling ranch house on the Texas plain, the mountain cabin high up in the Ozarks, and the white-fenced cottage on Cape Cod—into millions of homes throughout America went that inspiring message yesterday to women as they went about their daily tasks.

It was Mrs. John Nance Garner's radio bow to the women of America. She spoke over a National Broadcasting Co. network from Station WRC, in The Washington Post's "First Ladies of the Capital" interview series to a coast-to-coast audience. Banishing her self-confessed fear of "mike fright," she chatted animatedly about children and chickens, gardens, the folks back in Uvalde, Tex., old-fashioned obedience, cooking, housekeeping, and her job as secretary to the Vice President. She championed the woman who makes a career of helping her husband.

"Perhaps I was born about 50 years too late," she contended, "in that I still believe in the old teachings I learned from my mother. One of them is that a woman's highest achievement is in being a home-maker, the kind of wife who is a real helpmate to her husband. That is why I have always shunned publicity about my activities, because I have only done what I think a wife should do if she is really devoted to her husband and his success in life."

In recalling how she first came to assume the job as assistant to her husband in public life, she harkened back to 1902 when John Nance Garner first ran for Congress.

She said: "I didn't use the shorthand and secretarial training I acquired as a girl in Texas until after I married and our boy Tully was 5 years old. When Mr. Garner ran for Congress we had no money for extra help, so I just got out my old shorthand books and brushed up on by 'chicken scratches.' From then on I worked right along, in every campaign, taking care of every secretarial detail.

All His Office Work.

"Up to the time Mr. Garner became minority leader in the House, I did every single bit of his detailed office work, from typing, filing, dictation, to bookkeeping.

"Now my duties include a little of everything from reminding him to see his dentist to what hour the Senate meets. When he was Speaker of the House, I even had to send him a daily reminder to eat lunch. Of course I see many people for him, and have to be the judge of which ones have business of enough importance to come to his personal attention.

Miss Santry: "I understand you

MRS. JOHN NANCE GARNER, whose husband's career is her career. "A wife should be a real helpmeet to her husband"—and she is. She's his secretary, a secretary so efficient as to be almost his alter ego.

Enthusiastically Extols the Old Home Virtue of Domesticity.

are just as good a cook, Mrs. Garner, as a secretary?"

Mrs. Garner: "Better. I enjoy cooking very much."

Intensive Training.

Miss Santry: "I suppose, then, that learning to cook was another important part of your early training."

Mrs. Garner: "Yes. For a girl to be a good cook was an old-fashioned attribute my mother believed in. When I was 12, and was living on the frontier of Texas with only brothers to play with, my mother, I think, was afraid I was becoming too much of a tomboy. At any rate, she packed me off to a girls' school in San Antonio. When I came back for my summer vacation she determined it was time I learned some of the domestic arts. I remember my mother taking me into the kitchen and saying to the cook: 'Louise, I want you to teach my little girl how to bake bread, and I don't want you to wash up after her. She must learn to do that herself.'"

A dash of civic pride was allowed to find its way into the interview in a manner that must have gladdened the hearts of the Chamber of Commerce of Uvalde, Tex. When asked about the Garner home town, Mrs. Garner described Uvalde as a most modern and flourishing little city with 30 miles of beautifully paved streets, electricity, gas, all the modern improvements.

However, there are no brass bands to greet the Garners when they arrive home each year from Washington, for down in Uvalde the yare just "home folks."

Mrs. Garner: "Brass bands? That makes me laugh, we're not the brass band kind. They know us too well. We usually slip in unannounced if we can. But our happiest times are when we get home, and settle down. As evening comes on, our neighbors pass by the house, come up on the porch, and then we enjoy talking about everything from people to gardens, children and chickens, in fact, just as in most small towns, everything concerning everyone is of interest."

And there was a message for the folks in Uvalde, too:

"I want to say to them, however interesting my life is here in Washington, my roots have gone so deep in Uvalde soil, I am always anxious to get back home to all my good neighbors and friends."

Listen Friday at 3 p. m. for Senator Hattie Caraway, who will be interviewed over Station WMAL. Read the story the following day on this page.

No Feminine Beethovens, Says Woman Composer

By Hope Ridings Miller.

WOMEN ARE SO BUSY giving composers to the world there is little likelihood of there ever being a feminine rival of such men as Bach, Beethoven and Wagner. So believes Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, known as the "Dean of Women Composers," who has been active in the world of music for more than 50 years.

Mrs. Beach is in Washington to attend the golden jubilee music festival of the National League of American Pen Women, being held in her honor.

"I doubt, seriously, if any woman will ever take a place among the really great composers of the world," she said yesterday at the Willard Hotel, "because women must be occupied with so many different things. Duties of the home, for instance, serve to occupy a great part of any woman's life.

Mrs. Beach believes musical creation has taken a more serious turn in the last few years.

"It is no longer considered a pastime," she asserted. "It has become a profession entailing the duties and difficulties of all professions in which competition is keen. I can remember when anybody who had written one piece, no matter how insignificant, was called a composer, just as some persons today are called poets because they have written a few verses."

Mrs. Beach agrees with Beethoven's idea that no one knows the source of inspiration for composition.

"Sometimes an original idea comes to me when I am listening to a piece of music. Occasionally it comes without warning; often I feel it after I have been working for a long time. I have little patience with those who sit and wait to be inspired, even though our greatest musical creations have undoubtedly been the result of inspiration."

Of women composers Mrs. Beach complimented the works of Phyllis Fergus Hoyt, Gena Branscombe, Marian Bauer, Mary Howe, Mary Carr Moore, and Anabelle Morris Buchanan.

Mrs. Beach has received favorable attention in musical circles since 1883 when she began playing in concerts and recitals. Later, she devoted her time to playing and composing.

Her cantatas, concertos and symphonies are known throughout the country. Among her most popular numbers are "The Sea Fairies" and "The Chambered Nautilus," both cantatas; "Festival Jubilate," for mixed voices; "Mass in E Flat," and "Quintet" for piano and strings.

Among the six compositions she played yesterday afternoon at the White House was "The Year's at the Spring," a musical setting for Browning's famous poem.

NO FEMININE BACHS or Beethovens are in the offing believes Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, "dean of women composers," in whose honor the golden jubilee music festival of the League of American Pen Women is being held.

Today's Brides Receive Wider Fashion Choice

Bridesmaids' Gowns Also More Varied, More Colorful.

New York, April 23 (AP).—Wedding costumes are getting gayer, not only for the bridesmaids, but for the brides. This is partly because it is spring, but also because brides of today want a wider choice than the traditional satin and orange blossoms.

Satin is still being worn, of course, but organdy and other cotton fabrics are being seen in wedding gowns. Veils are shorter and headdresses more varied.

As for bridesmaids, they are going in for color in a big way. Red velvet, navy blue, cloth of silver, and other unlikely fabrics and colors are succeeding to the baby blue and spring green of other years.

Bouquets, too, are changing. Some brides are carrying daisies, white lilacs, and other informal flowers. Daisies, cornflowers, and such are appropriate for the bridesmaids.

Rather Medieval.

One wedding gown shown recently has the verve, fitted line of a medieval robe. The off-the-shoulder neckline is adorned only with a tiny pleated ruffle, as are the cuffs. The cap is nunlike.

Another gown of modernistic severity suggests a nurse's uniform. It is made of heavy white crepe, with a high neck that swathes the throat, long sleeves, and a draped bodice. The off-the-face cap is rather like a nurse's, but the lavish tulle veil and the formal bouquet remind one this bride is no nurse.

At the other extreme is a garden-party sort of gown, made of organdy, with a V-neck, long organdy gloves with flared cuffs, and a headdress consisting simply of a fillet of daisies. The bride wearing this should carry daisies.

A wedding gown in the traditional white satin is given a feeling of newness by a round yoke and long, tight sleeves of chiffon trimmed with narrow satin bands. The headdress, made on the model of the new halo hats, is also trimmed with bands of satin.

White taffeta makes a bridal gown with a rounded neckline and a Quakerish collar, a bodice, long simple sleeves, and a short, rounded train. The veil is attached to nothing more than a bouquet of white violets and orange blossoms pinned on top of the bride's head.

For the bride who wants to be as dressed up as possible, one designer has fashioned a gown of white satin with a deep, square yoke of lace and long, fitted lace sleeves. A satin neckband ties in front, with long bow-ends. The veil suggests a Breton peasant cap.

Bridesmaids appear in such varied costumes as these: Brown-and-white striped organdy; stiffened, flower-printed marquisette, watery blue mousseline, and white organdy with a little pleated cape.

Momentarily Quiescent.

EVERYBODY who knows Bess Davis Schreiner likes her. She is undoubtedly one of the world's grandest scouts, not to mention being Washington's best publicity woman. And Bess also is noted for her dramatic activities.

For instance, there's the famous Eddie Melcher proposal that Bess would be swell in one of Ibsen's plays. A couple of people took exception to this suggestion, but the majority were in accord with the idea. She is a real actress—if you don't think so just watch her handling some prickly ladies who are cantankerous about their publicity some time.

• • • •

And now Bess Schreiner is laid low with a painful fracture in her leg from a twist that happened early last week on the steps of a friend's home. It won't keep her down long, but she'll have to "crutch" it for a while. And with Bess in the middle of all sorts of things!

• • • •

She was supposed to be a hostess Saturday night along with her grand red-haired friend Caroline McKinley, at Caroline's gorgeous red-brocaded studio. The artist of the evening was Maud Sheerer, of New York, who does dramatic "recreations" somewhat along the lines of Cornelia Otis Skinner's sketches.

Those lucky enough to be invited felt things weren't quite right at Caroline's without having the gallantly smiling, white-bobbed Bess drifting hospitably about the studio.

Speedy recovery to you Bess.

Competed With Blossoms.

SIGNORA MARGHERITA SARFATTI, the striking personality Mussolini has led by the hand to the forefront of Italian journalism, was in Washington last week. She was widely entertained and interviewed in spite of the competing D. A. R. Congress and the cherry blossoms.

• • • •

It is interesting to recall this brilliant woman first began writing, and with depth of thought behind that writing, when she was only 14 years old.

Also, the fact that even then, she wrote on decidedly socialistic lines, which bewildered and distressed her family.

But, had she written otherwise, would she be famous now, no matter what her writing talent? Perhaps.

• • • •

At any rate it was on the Socialist sheet, Avanti, she first became associated with Il Duce. Now her most famous book is a biography of the great Italian whose beetling brows and stern mouth so closely recall similar characteristics in the face of France's Napoleon Bonaparte.

However, it is to women and to art Signora Sarfatti has dedicated most of her recent writings, although her lectures often include politics and history among the subjects she discusses.

The Big Ball Famine.

OVER THE Sunday night supper tables a matter of much talk was the Cherry Blossom Ball of the previous night which closed the elaborate festival Washington had in honor of the cherry blooms last week.

"I never saw so many black ties in years," said one socially prominent lady.

"There were even girls in sport clothes and hats and men in knickers," chimed in another.

• • • •

"And lots of unattached ladies swarming around like schools of strange fish, with no men in their parties at all," said the first lady.

"And just imagine having to sit there for two hours before Mrs. Roosevelt got there so they could begin the pageant! The Marine Band played, but it wasn't music anyone could dance to, of course, so everybody just sat and sat and sat! And the policemen ordered everyone about with 'you can't do this and you can't do that' all over the place."

• • • •

"But I think the worst thing was nothing to eat all evening," said the first lady in complete disgust. "I never saw a ball of that size where they didn't serve some kind of supper, did you?"

• • • •

"No indeed," said lady number two, "they might at least have had a cherry "coke." I wonder what they'll do with all the money they got, anyhow. There were certainly lots of people there."

"Anyhow, I think the little Japanese ladies in their costumes were grand," ended lady number one as she drained her cocktail.

Crowded Hours Fill the Days Of Pen Women

Business, Art and Social Sessions Mark Convention.

BUSINESS, art and social life are being mixed by the American Pen Women to make crowded hours for their convention days. Yesterday's program of the seventh biennial convention included two business sessions, a luncheon, a reception, a tea and a short-story hour.

At 10:30 the convention was called to order by Mrs. Clara Keck Heflebower, National president. Reports were given by National officers, State branch presidents and chairmen.

After the composer's luncheon at Wilson Teachers College and the luncheon at the Willard for other members, the convention reconvened for a short business session.

At 4 o'clock Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt received visiting delegates at the White House, at which time a musicale arranged by Phyllis Fergus Hoyt was presented in the east room by the composer-members of the league.

Composers Honored.

Among those whose compositions appeared on this program were Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Frances Copthorne, Dorothy Emery, Elizabeth Butterfield and Pearl Adams. Assisting artists were Ruth Shaffner, soprano; Evelyn Scott and Elsa Raner, violins; Mabel Duncan, cello; Mme. Marie Sidenius Zendt, lyric soprano, and Mr. and Mrs. Harlan Randall.

Later, at a tea given at the clubhouse of the American Association of University Women, compositions by members, including Pearl Dadam, Lulu Jones Downing, Iris Brussels and Alice Brown Stout, were presented. Assisting artists were Harlan Randall, Evelyn Randall and Edmund Caldwell.

A short-story hour at the Willard Hotel, under direction of Gene Ziegfield, assisted by Isabella Fleck and Naomi Duff Smith, was the feature of the night session. Mrs. Grace Thompson Seton, National short-story chairman, presented the annual story awards. Five-minute talks on their prize-winning manuscripts were given by each of the prize winners, Dora Aydelotte, of Illinois; Eva Pittaro, of New York, and Carolyn Barr, of Illinois.

Neil Swanson, editor of the Baltimore Evening Sun and author of "The Judas Tree," was the main speaker.

Plan Reception.

A reception for composers in honor of Mrs. H. H. A. Beach was the last event of the day.

Today's session will begin at 9 o'clock in the Willard room.

Many prominent out-of-town members, besides National officers, are arriving for the convention.

Drama Serves Pure Purpose, Says Minister

Drama may serve an elevating influence as well as entertainment, thinks Mrs. E. C. Miller, founder and president of the Inspirational Drama League of America.

Mrs. Miller, now visiting in Washington, told of her drama project yesterday at the Mayflower Hotel.

"Last year," she said, "I inaugurated a series of open-air Sunday afternoon entertainments in Cleveland. Each program consisted of a Biblical drama and a vesper service, followed by a picnic supper."

Mrs. Miller, who is an ordained minister, conducted the vesper service and stressed the lessons portrayed in the pageants. She explained that each of the dramas was written by M. L. Bach, of Madison, Wis., who also took the leading role in each pageant. The latter included from 5 to 20 characters, depending on the scope of the subject, and ordinarily lasted for half an hour.

These services were continued for nine Sundays last July and August on the lawn of Mrs. Miller's 75-acre estate on the West Side of Cleveland. They were so well received she is planning to conduct programs of this type again this summer. She also hopes to inaugurate a similar series in September at her estate in Windsor, Mass.

No More Saloons, Federation Votes in Meeting Preparation

IN PREPARATION FOR the council meeting of the General Federation of Woman's Clubs, which will be held in Hot Springs, Ark., in May, resolutions to guide the delegates in voting were adopted by members of the D. C. Federation at their meeting in Barker Hall yesterday.

One resolution opposed the return of the saloon and recommended the incorporation of temperance instruction in the public school curriculum.

The federation also voted to indorse the new food and drug act; to study unemployment insurance and old age pension legislation; to study measures for crime prevention, and to prepare a study on the proposed equal rights amendment.

"The newspapers want the news of tomorrow, just as clubs want to study the problems of tomorrow," Miss Malvina Lindsay, editor of the woman's page of The Washington Post, told members of the club in her address on "The Petticoated Press."

"The feminine touch is felt today in every branch of newspaper work, from the comic strip to the foreign news service," Miss Lindsay said. She then stated the most significant work done by newspapers recently had been in broadening the scope of the woman's pages.

"Women's pages in newspapers are no longer restricted to matters concerning the kitchen and nursery," she concluded.

The program was in the charge of the department of press and publicity, of which Miss Ruth Snodgrass is chairman. Dr. Della R. Ducomb, chairman of printing for the federation, read a romantic story about the printing press; Mrs. Sarah E. Deeds gave a reading from Macbeth, and Miss Francis Tucker sang a number of old English, French and modern songs.

Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley, president of the organization, presided at the meeting. Hostesses for the meeting were Mrs. Edgar B. Meritt, Mrs. Henry Fenno Sawtelle, Mrs. William Farris and Mrs. James Harwood.

Trade Brisk As Franklin Bank Opens

Deposits Exceed Total of Withdrawals for First Day.

Institution Operating as Fifth Branch of New Organization.

Deposits were reported to have exceeded withdrawals yesterday for the restricted Franklin National Bank which reopened as the downtown branch of City Bank of Washington. Reopening of the Franklin institution as the fifth branch of City Bank made $2,000,000, or 65 per cent of Franklin Bank's deposits, available. Reopening occurred 13 months and 20 days after Franklin Bank closed in the National bank holiday.

Actual time of opening was not announced definitely until Sunday when letters to those having accounts of $50 and over informed them the bank would open at 9 a. m. yesterday. But four persons were waiting to enter the building, at Tenth street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest, at the opening. The bank has 18,000 accounts.

The new branch's first customer, the officials announced, was Mrs. A. B. Smith, secretary to Dr. R. L. Sexton, physician, who made a $2,000 deposit.

Business increased during the noon hour and in the afternoon as news of the opening became general. A larger amount of business is expected today.

Officials said practically all withdrawals were of small accounts and that several deposits of $5,000 had been made. There were but two customers in the lobby when the bank closed shortly after 3 p. m.

When the former bank's patrons entered the building, they found an entirely renovated interior. Baskets of flowers had been sent by other banks, business firms dealing with the bank, friends of its officers, associations and official groups—all tokens of good will.

Officers of other banks called through the day to express best wishes. The first of these was Joshua Evans, jr., a vice president of Hamilton National Bank.

Customers were welcomed by Clarence F. Burton, president of City Bank; John B. Cochran, president of the former Franklin Bank and chairman of City Bank's directorate; Thomas P. Hickman, a vice president and conservator of Franklin Bank, and a vice president of City Bank, in charge of this branch. A. Scott Offutt, another vice president of City Bank, also was present.

Opening of the branch was the culmination of nearly six months' intensive effort.

The remaining 35 per cent of the former bank's deposits are now trusteed and will be made available as its assets are liquidated. The liquidating committee has its office on the second floor of the bank building and will arrange for issuance of participating certificates to depositors. The latter will be notified by the committee when dividends are ready.

Waynesboro Cooperative Dairy Thrives

Problem of Distributing Milk Is Handled Successfully.

[This is the fourteenth of a series of stories on the cooperative farm organizations of Virginia.]

Waynesboro, Va., April 23 (Spl.). In spite of many claims that the distribution of fluid milk is too complicated and difficult a problem for farmers to handle, the Early Dawn Cooperative Dairy of Waynesboro is proving that a farmers' cooperative can distribute fluid milk successfully.

When this cooperative dairy was started in November, 1932, its volume of sales averaged 180 gallons of fluid milk and cream per day. In 18 months it has built up its volume of sales to an average of more than 250 gallons per day. At the same time the quality of the milk and dairy products distributed to consumers by the cooperative and the quality of its service have won the good will of the consumers of Waynesboro and have won increasing support from them.

When the cooperative dairy was started it had no capital, and the members were in debt for their feed bills. This group of cooperating farmers started their venture in cooperative distribution of milk by leasing the equipment of the old Early Dawn Dairy Co., with an option to buy it.

Waited for Payments.

It rented the plant and refrigeration service from the ice company and one member loaned his milk delivery truck to the new cooperative to help it get started. The members waited for payment for their milk until the cooperative could collect from the customers.

After a while collections from customers caught up with the expenditures so that the members are now being paid promptly for the milk they deliver.

Another difficulty encountered by the co-op, was the poor condition of the delivery equipment which they took over. They found it necessary to buy new equipment. After operating a year the members of the cooperative believed that they had made encouraging progress so they contracted to purchase the equipment which they had been leasing.

The members are now paying for the milk plant equipment of the cooperative through deductions from their milk checks, as well as their latest acquisition of delivery equipment.

Members' Agreements.

The members are given certificates of interest in the capital fund of the cooperative as evidence of their equity in the accumulated capital of the organization. At the end of the first year the members had built up individual investments in the cooperative, ranging from $75 to $700, in proportion to the volume of milk they deliver and the length of time they have been members of the cooperative.

The members have all signed agreements with their cooperative to deliver to it all the milk they produce, except that needed for home use and that required to fill contracts to ship milk to other markets. This gives the cooperative a dependable supply of milk with which to expand its sales.

The members have elected a board of directors. O. C. Flory has been engaged as manager. The president, A. F. Weaver, and the vice president, V. P. Houff, are members of the executive committee.

Comprehensive financial reports of the condition of the business are given to the directors each month so that they know which way their cooperative is going—which is forward.

New Deal 'Rolls With Punch'

Farley Politico-Fight Game Axiom Handy as Charge of Regimentation Is Denied on Three Fronts; AAA Ignores Milk Price Control.

By Raymond Clapper.

By laying aside its milk control plan because of widespread opposition, and through speeches by prominent advisers, the Administration gave strength yesterday to the impression that it is shying away from the charge that the New Deal seeks to regiment the country.

At the same time Administration spokesmen suggested in speeches that the real regimentation occurred under the old order in behalf of a privileged few.

This position was taken in speeches yesterday by Secretary of State Hull before the annual meeting of the Associated Press in New York and by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace at the Arbor Day celebration at Nebraska City, Nebr. It also was taken by Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Tugwell in his address to the American Society of Newspaper Editors Saturday night.

Meanwhile the Agricultural Adjustment Administration decided not to put its dairy production control plan into effect, at least, for the present.

This plan, which would have paid farmers benefits for reducing milk production, was widely opposed and AAA officials felt it was not wise to insist upon it in face of such great opposition.

The decision was regarded in AAA circles as bearing out Administration assertions that no compulsory regimentation is desired and that recovery efforts are based entirely upon the Democratic principle.

Farmers Fear Taxes.

Much of the opposition of dairy farmers was based upon the fear that processing taxes, which would have been levied to finance the benefit payments, would, in the last analysis, be paid not by city consumers, as is theoretically intended, but by the farmers themselves.

AAA will continue to deal with the milk situation by enforcing milk license agreements upon distributors in cities, but without control of production. This was intended in the plan just laid aside, but officials said they were dubious of good results. They have no way of restricting the oversupply of milk which presses on city markets and makes maintenance of price difficult.

AAA became convinced of widespread opposition to its plan through a series of 15 regional meetings with representatives of the dairy industry and through independent inquiries of its own.

While never enthusiastic about its production control plan, AAA felt it was the best that could be devised. Officials will continue to seek reduction in the number of diseased cattle and will buy surplus milk for distribution among the poor. But in view of the fact that there are more milk cows in the country than ever before in history, and the fact that one-fourth of the total farm income comes from milk, officials are not hopeful that the situation of dairy farmers can be much relieved until some new plan is put into effect.

Critics Got There First.

Chester Davis, agricultural administrator, said he believed one reason AAA encountered so much opposition with its milk plan was that critics "beat us to the country."

At any rate, Davis said, the laying aside of the plan might be taken as proof that AAA is opposed to farm regimentation.

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, in a letter read before a House Agriculture sub-committee, gave support to the bill of Representative Kerr (Democrat), North Carolina, for a 25 per cent tax on all tobacco marketed in excess of quotas alloted to individual farmers by AAA. This is the same principle that underlies the Bankhead compulsory cotton bill. But Wallace took the position that the tax of 25 per cent was not a prohibitive tax. The Bankhead 50 per cent tax on cotton is generally regarded as prohibitive and the essence of its compulsory nature.

Secretary Wallace told his Nebraska audience yesterday he feared regimentation probably more than did 90 per cent of his listeners. He urged the farmers of the vast West and North not to follow the Bankhead model "until we at least have an opportunity to benefit by the results of this Southern experiment."

Wallace Cites "Real Issue."

Wallace said regimentation had been going on since the Civil War. He said there had been regimentation growing out of tariffs worked out by business men sitting with representatives of the Government, and thorough monetary policies worked out by bankers. The real issue, Secretary Wallace said, is whether the country wants any change in the rules and if so, who is to do the changing.

Secretary Hull, dealing with the same theme, said "we do not desire public regimentation, but we should not permit irresponsible regimentation by small private groups in their own selfish interests."

These utterances, coupled with the bowing to farm sentiment against the proposed milk control plan and the Administration's desire to disclaim any responsibility for the Bankhead compulsory cotton control bill, are viewed by many here as marking a shift in tactics by way of an adjustment to the trend of public sentiment.

Postmaster General Farley drawing on the lore of the prizefight ring from his days as New York boxing commissioner, once said that in politics it was smart to "roll with the punch." That is what Harry Hopkins, relief administrator, did when he discovered that individuals on inferior farm land did not relish being moved away to better land and accordingly readjusted his program for land settlement.

There is no thought here that the Administration is abandoning its objective of striving to bring about a more even distribution of this world's goods. But there are numerous indications that orders are out in the Administration to bear in mind that no program is much good until it is sold to the country and that the New Deal will make more headway in the long run if tactful salesmanship is employed now.

Cock Robin Jousts Day Away In Fury at Window Image Here

Jenifer Street Pane Lures Bird to Exhaustive Attacks.

If Cock Robin Redbreast, whose District address just now is on Jenifer street northwest, between 3927 and 3925, and at 5302 Reno road, is found dead one of these balmy, April mornings, it will be suicide, Mr. Coroner—suicide because he doesn't know himself.

For the past several days Cock Robin has been staring at his own image in the window panes of the home of S. E. Godden, at 3925 Jenifer street. He preens his feathers, proudly stretches his wing.

"What a fine bird you are," he chirps, half to himself. "That is, if you are I, and not some other bird, after all. If you're not I, come and fight."

Then he flies against the window, striking it with his beak.

If anyone kills Cock Robin, it will be Cock Robin himself—thereby putting him in the same category as the mythical slayer of the story book Cock Robin. He is a feathered Don Quixote, tilting with a glass windmill.

Someone ought to tell Cock Robin the story of Cervantes' imaginative hero. A tragedy may be averted.

"For over 24 hours he's kept this up," Mrs. Godden lamented yesterday. "Sometimes he becomes so exhausted he falls, but when he's recuperated, he goes right back to work again!"

"We're really worried about this robin," sighed Miss Yassell. "After all, he's a pretty bird. Poor thing, he's forever pecking at the windows of the house!"

COCK ROBIN.

Cock Robin took time off from his quixotic battles yesterday to flutter into the yard of Mrs. J. Roland Walton, at 5302 Reno road, where he feasted with scores of other birds Mrs. Walton kindly provides for.

Then he whirred back to his windows.

Arts Group Again Backs Wider F St.

Reaffirms Favor of Plan to Crop Off Front of Patent Office.

Union Square, Building Proposals Get Official Sanction.

The Fine Arts Commission, led by Chairman Charles Moore, yesterday inspected the old Patent Office Building and reaffirmed its indorsement of the plan to widen F street between Seventh and Ninth streets by removing the building's south steps.

For months there has been agitation to shear off the protruding stone staircase so the F street "bottle neck" can be eliminated and the two-block stretch widened and opened to two-way traffic. Among the many supporters of the change is Commissioner John C. Gotwals.

Progress plans for Union Square, submitted by Frederick Law Olmsted, were approved. In connection with this development, immediately west of the Capitol, the commission recommended that street car tracks be removed from First street northwest and cars be routed to Third street, between Pennsylvania avenue and Independence avenue.

The model for a pediment on the new Archives Building was approved. The sculptor is A. A. Weinman, of New York.

The Mal project will necessitate reloction of the statue of Joseph Henry, first secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, the commission decided. After 54 years in one place, the likeness will be moved to another site near the Smithsonian Building, if the commission's recommendation is followed.

A statue of George Rogers Clark, by Herman MacNeil, was approved in model form. It will be placed in a memorial building at Fort Sackville commemorating the 150th anniversary of the conquest of the Northwest Territory by Clark and his army. Congress authorized an appropriation of $1,000,000 as part contribution toward the memorial.

Designs for additional buildings to be erected at the Agriculture department's experimental station at Beltsville, Md., submitted by Delos Smith, were approved. Another is for the restoration of the old Snowden mansion, built in 1798, which will be used as the superintendent's house.

The design by Harry F. Cunningham for the Nebraska State World War memorial to be erected in the capitol at Lincoln was approved by the commission.

Birth Control Bill Advanced By Committee

Doctors Could Circulate Information Under Measure.

(Associated Press.)

The Senate Judiciary Committee yesterday approved the Hastings bill to permit circulation of birth control literature for use by physicians, hospitals, medical colleges and druggists.

No record vote was taken, but it was announced that Chairman Ashurst (Democrat), Arizona, and Senators Stephens (Democrat), Mississippi, and McCarran (Democrat), Nevada, opposed a favorable report.

The bill amends three sections of the criminal code by adding the following:

"The provisions of this section shall not be construed to apply to any book or information relating to the prevention of conception, or article, instrument, substance, drug, medicine, or thing designed, adapted, or intended for the prevention of conception, for use (1) by any physician legally licensed to practice medicine in any State Territory or the District of Columbia, or by his direction or prescription; (2) by any medical college legally chartered under the laws of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia; (3) by any druggist in filling any prescription of a licensed physician; or (4) by any hospital or clinic licensed in any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia."

Ruse to Trap Dillinger Told By Inn Keeper

Dropped Note for Help in Cigarette Pack; Agents Come in Planes.

Minneapolis, April 23 (AP).—How he got word of Dillinger's presence to the outside world by a note in a cigarette package was told today by Emil Wanatka, proprietor of a northwoods resort near Mercer, Wis., in an interview copyrighted by the Minneapolis Tribune.

Wanatka's story as told in the Tribune follows:

Dillinger, accompanied by six men and three women, strolled into Little Bohemia, Wanatka's resort, Friday. They came in two large automobiles.

"My name," said the ring leader, "is John Dillinger. You've probably heard of me. We're on the lam. You've got to put us up."

"But," stammered Wanatka, "I can't do that. I'm expecting my wife back next week and you can't stay here."

The man who said he was Dillinger scowled.

"Don't talk back now," he said. "Do what we say."

Wanatka submitted.

Selects Cottages.

First, Dillinger directed the owner to pick out some nearby cottages and get them ready.

With the gang settled, Dillinger decided they would play poker and brought his men into the main lodge.

As the men came into the lodge to play cards they laid their firearms on the table. Dillinger invited Wanatka to sit in.

By Saturday night Wanatka concluded that he should get word out that the men sought by officials all over the country were at his place.

Wanatka excused himself from the poker game and stepped into a bathroom. Hastily he scribbled a note that he was held captive by Dillinger, "tucked it into a package of cigarettes and tossed it out of the window.

Then he went back to the poker game.

Washington Called.

Early Sunday morning a call to J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Department of Justice, was made from Rhinelander, Wis.

Two dozen agents came by plane and automobile. Wanatka, wondering whether the trick had worked, was nervous all day.

Sunday night the poker game was resumed. It came to a sudden close along about midnight when an automobile light showed through the window.

Dillinger sprang into action.

He barked orders. Two of his men, snatching up guns, dashed upstairs to a second floor balcony and blazed their way into the darkness. Others took up positions inside the lodge, with Dillinger himself manning a machine gun.

In a moment bullets were zipping through the windows of the lodge. The agents were returning the fire. Then came the tear gas. One of the men on the balcony dashed down stairs. Dillinger shouted out another order and the men rushed to a rear door and out into the night.

Three Schools Planning Exercises.

Luray, Va., April 23 (Spl.).—The largest graduating class for Page County high schools, 71, fourteen more than last year, will receive diplomas from the three high schools of Luray, Shenandoah, and Stanley.

Plans are only partially complete for finals. Luray will hold a commencement with the graduates wearing caps and gowns for the first time.

Stanley will hold its first commencement in the new $50,000 high building, with Ashton Dovel, floor leader of the Virginia House of Delegates, as speaker.

House Will Get Injunction Ban

Bill Would Halt Utilities From Enjoining Rate Orders.

The Johnson bill to bar public utilities from obtaining injunctions in Federal courts against rates promulgated by State utility commissions will be brought before the House under procedure permitting amendments, according to the Associated Press.

This was decided yesterday by the House Rules Committee after extended hearing of Judiciary Committee members, who are split on the Senate-approved bill by Senator Johnson (Republican), California.

A group led by Representative Lewis (Democrat), Colorado, favors permitting the utilities to appeal to the Supreme Court, while the minority headed by Chairman Sumners (Democrat), Texas, holds the rate issues should be settled by the courts of the State affected.

"Forty-five State commissions have asked for the Johnson bill," Representative McKeown (Democrat), Oklahoma, said.

House Nazi Probers Prepare to Start Quiz

The House Nazi Investigation Committee is preparing quietly to start its inquiry, the Associated Press reported.

Headed by Representative McCormack (Democrat), Massachusetts, the committee has held several meetings to decide how it would proceed.

It still has to select counsel before the actual investigation starts. McCormack said yesterday he was uncertain when hearings would get underway.

Radio Waves and Ripples

MAYBE it's all right for movie damsels to dawdle over cereal and coffee in the boudoir. Nothing is said when wealthy bachelors ring for breakfast in bed. But when a radio announcer has a microphone installed in his bed chamber . . . it's news!

WJSV minds have gone to a lot of trouble to do that little thing for Arthur Godfrey, maestro of Columbia's Sun Dial. In his case it's not the last gasp of temperament done to pacify a mere notion. Art has a real excuse. It's a real struggle for him to wake up in the morning . . . because certain nerves injured in an automobile accident keep him awake, so when he does finally doze off . . . it's for keeps.

Like most of us, it doesn't mean a thing to him when the alarm goes off. But now Art can go on the air the minute his valet succeeds in awakening him.

Through special wiring a gong will be set off shortly before 7 a. m. in the control room of WJSV. Simultaneously the gong will break Art's slumbers and he has only to reach out sleepily at his elbow to grasp a waiting microphone instead of an alarm clock. The rest is easy and the program starts within the four walls of the bedchamber.

* * * *

AS an undergraduate at one of New England's vine-clad colleges he was known as the barytone who sang "Ramona" so that even professors' wives brushed away a tear and remembered their first "buggy ride." On the air he is the "Gordon" of the Gordon, Dave and Bunny novelty trio offering catchy rhythms daily at 5:45 p. m. over a Columbia network.

But he was just "D" to his pals at college who knew his familiar figure six feet four with the jib-boom nose and goggles. As leader of Dartmouth's championship glee club back in 1928, audiences took him for a "professor" but his fellow singers loved him for his flagrant ties, his ability at losing his tail coat just before a concert and his civility to freshmen. (Your scribe was a freshmen there when D. Gordon Graham was number one barytone of the Dartmouth campus.)

Whether it was steering dowagers at an alumni gathering, cramming his "Eccy" just before class, or soaring aloft on the top note of "Mandalay," D. Gordon Graham did it like a swashbuckling Cyrano. Your scribe remembers him best in such numbers as "Sir Henry Morgan," "Tommy Lad" and "The Hills of Home." There was something mighty compelling about "D's" lanky six feet four and the jaunty way he wore his tails.

That last strain of "Henry Morgan" which went: "But I'm for living hon-est-ly and dy-i-i-ing in my boots. Like an old, bold mate of Henry Morgan!" was Graham's meat. He swooped down on the last note making it vibrate to the last row of admiring debutantes. Later the debbies could be seen dancing with our barytone . . . their heads came up to his chest.

This is one piece of publicity uninspired by handouts and if Gordon sees it he may remember another goggled-eyed lad who rendered dubious harmony with the second bass tribe . . . front row on the end.

WHEN a resounding crack of that old "apple" bring fans to their feet today at Griffith Stadium, sports experts of both networks will relay highlights of the Capital City's opening baseball game between the Washington Senators and the Boston Red Sox.

Providing pressure of official business doesn't keep him at the White House, President Roosevelt will hurl out the first ball with his usual gusto, while socialites, Cabinet members and diplomats rub shoulders with fans to root for last year's American League champions in their local debut.

Arch MacDonald and Harold Grey will handle the local spot for WJSV at 2:30 p. m., while Ted Husing will bark out the details for Columbia's network. Bill Coyle, at 3 p. m., will talk to the microphone for National over WMAL.

ETHEL EVERETT, young N. B. C. dramatic actress, is well known for her frequent appearances with the Red Davis sketches broadcast from Radio City. She has played on Broadway and has toured widely.

WRC—"The Child of the Modern World" talk by Dr. Ella Oppenheimer, Children's Bureau, Department of Labor, 11:15 a. m.; Mrs. Charles Dana Gibson, widow of the famous artist, talking on "Why I Believe in Child Adoption," 3:30 p. m.; part two, "The Rogue Song," featuring Gladys Swarthout, opera diva, and John Barclay, barytone, 10 p. m.

WMAL — Syracuse University Women's Glee Club, 1:45 p. m.; Nellie Revell, 2:45 p. m.; Dr. William T. Foster, Consumer's Advisory Board speaking on "Local Government and the New Deal," 7:15 p. m.; Hudson Vocalians, offering "More Than You Know," "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers," "Lawd, You Made the Night Too Long," "You're Gonna Lose Your Gal," and "By an Old Water Mill," 8:30 p. m.

S. Stribling, 10:30 p. m.

JAMES THURBER, noted for his writings and sketches in "The New Yorker," will present vagaries of current events in a light—if somewhat saddened—viewpoint to a Columbia microphone. He started his career as a radio raconteur on April 19, at 10:45 p. m.

Augusta Cadets Beat Virginia Cubs in 10th

Charlottesville, Va., April 23 (Spl.).—Two errors by Left Fielder Fitzhugh enabled Augusta Military Academy to score two runs in the tenth inning to defeat the Virginia freshmen here today, 4-2.

Daughtrey, on the mound for the Cadets, blanked the first-year team up to the eighth and fanned ten batsmen.

Anderson and Swink led with the stick for Augusta, the former getting a double and the latter a triple.

Spy Hill, Derby Hope, Triumphs at Jamaica

Jamaica Race Track, April 23 (AP). Spy Hill, son of the English Derby winner, Spion Kop, and considered Mrs. Payne Whitney's chief Kentucky Derby and Preakness hope, drove to a hard-earned victory in his 3-year-old debut here today. The colt, held at 30 to 1 in the Derby futures prior to his race in the Endeavor Purse today, stood a long, hard drive gamely to beat J. H. Louchheim's Derby eligible, Speedmore, by a head. Mrs. E. Yost's Xerseise, one that was not nominated for the coming classics, was third, five lengths behind.

Spy Hill was coupled with the Manhasset Stable's Rose Cross, which ran in last position throughout the mile and 70 yards trip, and the Brennan-trained entry ruled a slight choice at 13 to 10. Under the light weight of 107 pounds and with Coucci up, Spy Hill made the good time of 1:43 4-5.

Wins on Road Boost Hope Of Cubs

'We're Through Tossing Away Flags on Trips,' Grimm Declares.

Cites 5 Victories in Row; Took 30 and Lost 45 Away Last Year.

CHICAGO, April 23 (AP).—Charlie Grimm and his high-riding Cubs, baseball's prodigal sons of the road, came back home today bristling with confidence that the other National League clubs, including the mighty Giants, can just about forget the 1934 world series.

It wasn't so much that they had won all five of their starts in the opening drive for the flag that sent the Cub pennant fever up in the nineties; it was the way they did it and the fact that the victories were accomplished away from Wrigley Field.

Through Flopping About.

"It looks like we are through winning pennants on Wrigley Field and then tossing 'em away on foreign fields," Manager Charley Grimm responded as he accepted congratulations. "Last year, we won 56 and lost 23 at home for an average of .709, only to throw our advantage away by losing 45 and winning 30 away from home. Don't ask me why; it's been one of life's greatest mysteries to me. But here we have won five in a row already on foreign fields at Cincinnati and St. Louis."

President Roosevelt today will sign the bill passed by Congress last week legalizing boxing in the District. The District Commissioners, charged by the measure with the duty of selecting a three-man boxing commission to govern the sport here, will consider selection of the group as soon as possible and will probably announce their choices within a week or ten days.

Tech to Enter Penn Relays Confident

Coach Hardell Feels Boys Have Good Chance to Win Mile Event.

PRIMED to match their wing-footed strides with the best high and prep school relay teams of the East, Tech High School's small but select band of trackmen enter the Fortieth Annual Penn Relays at Philadelphia this week with at least an even chance of carrying off one of the coveted team honors up for competition.

Coach Hap Hardell's speed demons will compete in three of the biggest relay events conducted annually for scholastic teams. An excellent prospect to cop the Classified High School Mile Relay Championship of America, the Tech speedsters also will compete in the National scholastic sprint relay race and the Class B scholastic mile relay test.

The Tech coach believes his proteges should win the classified event in view of the time in which his four aces, George Bogan, Byron Hayden, Howard Lank and Charlie Davis have been traveling the distance. The recent discovery of a new star, a lad named Green, has kept the regulars working to the utmost to keep their berths and they have been making the circuit in 3:33 and better. Tech has won the high school classified event several times.

Only Outside Chance.

The sprint relay team of Bogan, Paul Lynch, Hayden and "Runt" Pierson is given only an outside chance of taking that event. Although this quartet has been making its quarter-mile in time fast enough to dispose of all opposition in this locality, it will be going up against the best in the country, Friday, and Coach Hardell harbors only a hope that it will place.

The third event in which Tech is entered, the Class B 1-mile relay, brings out the best prep and high school teams in the sport, but the Tech mentor is of the opinion that the Manual Trainers have a fighting chance of coming through.

Fast Derby Trial For Thomasville

Gelding Goes Full Route in Brilliant 2:07 3-5.

Louisville, Ky., April 23 (AP). What observers described as the most sensational workout at Churchill Downs this season for the full derby route was turned in today by Thomasville, lightly regarded chestnut gelding nominee of H. P. Headley. Thomasville stepped the mile and a quarter in 2:07 3-5, and was going handily at the finish. He was timed at 0:24 2-5 at the quarter, 0:48 3-5 at the half, 1:13 4-5 at the three-quarters, 1:40 for the mile, and 1:53 3-5 for a mile and an eighth. He was paced for the last seven-eighths mile by Baby Stare, not a derby entry.

Other workouts today were of a routine character. War Pledge worked a mile in 1:48 2-5, pulled up, and was timed at the mile and a quarter at 2:16, breezing. Ridge Mor went three-eighths in 0:35 4-5 in preparation for a longer workout tomorrow. Rich Phil went three-quarters in 1:16 handily.

Philippi Nine Names Poling Business Head

Philippi, W. Va., April 23 (Spl.). Forrest Poling, Barbour County prosecutor, has been appointed business manager of the Philippi Club of the West Virginia State Baseball League. Fox Bayles has been chosen secretary-treasurer, A. D. Poling, field manager, and Adrian Davis, West Lantz, W. I. Kilpatrick, Harry Brittenham and William Dadisman, directors.

Leading business men of the community are backing the club through an organization known as the Booster's Club.

Ever See a Dream Flying?

By Paul Gallico.

GARDEN CITY, Long Island, April 23.—This department is in the throes of buying an aeroplane. It makes such weird copy that I am compelled to write about it even at the risk of having my mail box stuffed with missives from philanthropic parties eager to sell me one at great personal loss to themselves. Perhaps you have never bought an aeroplane. You think you get an earful when you shop around for an automobile. Hah! Wait until you let on that you are in the market for a ship and see what happens to you.

My telephone hasn't stopped ringing for six days. My footsteps are dogged by parachute salesmen (lovely thought), instrument vendors, equipment purveyors, and advisers pro and con. My aviation instructor and flying teacher, Prof. Swanee Taylor, will not speak to me any more but just goes around grinding his teeth, twirling his waxed Mephistopheles moustaches and mumbling something about "Over my dead body . . . over my dead body you buy that ship . . ."

Al Williams, probably the greatest flying brain in the country, has been drawn into the controversy. So has Dome Harwood, Department of Commerce inspector; Dule Krantz, New York News flying camera pilot, and sundry other pilots, airplane salesmen, mechanics and personnel of Roosevelt Field, the great aviation center on Long Island near Garden City.

And all I did was walk up to a Laird biplane standing on the line in front of the Waco hangars, a black-and-gold ship powered with a Wright J. 6-9, 300-horsepower electric fan, pat its side, peer into the cockpit and say: "Gee, that looks like a swell ship. I wonder if it's for sale and how much it is. I'd love to own a ship like that."

Now, I will swear upon my word of honor that I hardly said this aloud; just breathed it to myself, I whispered it. It was no more than an idle thought barely given life. There were engines warming up and roaring all about me so that I hardly heard myself say it. Two hundred yards away stood Howard Aiker, the Waco sales manager, listening to an engine revving up. He came galloping over on a dead run. "Did you say you wanted to buy that ship?" he cried. "Just the thing for you. I took it in trade. Do you know who used to own it? Your publisher's daughter, Josephine Patterson. The ship has had the best of care. I can make you just the right price . . ."

At this point a voice at our elbow interrupted: "And pioneer instruments. You'll want those. You'll want a turn-and-bank indicator, horizon bubble, climb-indicator, clock, thermometer, barometer, atmospheric gauge, metric table, rate of foreign exchange guide, cigarette lighter, automatic postage stamp vendor, gas meter and combination radio, alcohol lamp and handkerchief box, just the thing for long or short trips, let me show you our catalogue . . ."

A man attached to a parachute came fluttering down nearby, disentangled himself from his harness and ran over. It was Joe Crane, the parachute jumper. "Hey, Paul, I hear you've just bought a ship. How about selling you a 'chute. You know, it's a good ship and all that and nothing is going to happen to you, but just in case you have to step over the side you ought to be wearing something besides a suit of underwear. H-m-m. Let me see, I guess you'd better have a 28-foot 'chute; you're a big feller. I think I know where I can pick one up for you. Where do you want me to deliver it?"

A Stinson came burning up to the line and Prof. Taylor, his waxed moustaches levelled like burnished daggers, leaped from the cabin yelling, "Over my dead body! Over my dead body! Why, it will ruin him, body and soul! Over my dead body! If you must have a ship get a Waco straight wing, or a Taylor Cub . . ."

Cries from the crowd now surrounding us, "No, no, a Curtiss Robin . . . A Fleet . . . A Fairchild, a Fairchild! No, no, a Travel-air is just the thing . . . Have you seen the new Fledgling! Don't get an open job, get a cabin ship . . . Let us demonstrate the Stinson! Monococup! O. X.! Commandair! Lockheed! Don't buy anything until we show you our new Douglas, twin-motor transcontinental cruising at 210. . . . How much did you want to spend? . . ."

Al Williams taxied up in his red and silver Hawk, lit his pipe and just stood there and looked gloomy. From time to time he shook his head. Finally he said, "If he can get it into my field—and get it out again—he can fly it." Swanee bellowed: "Over my dead body! It's too much aeroplane for him." (Miss Patterson at the age of 16 learned to fly in it and soloed it from Chicago to New York, which gives you an idea of what the professor thinks of my flying.)

The cries arose again, "Parachute . . . hangar rental . . . top overhaul . . . gyro-compass . . . earth inductor compass . . . two-way radio . . . lift . . . center of gravity . . . luggage trunk . . . over my dead body! Over my dead body!"

And all I did was look at it. Now they've got me so peeved I'm apt to buy it. All I need is the money.

Slain Justice Agent Tennis Ace

W. Carter Baum, Victim of Dillinger Shooting, Ranked Near Top Though Easy Hitter; Reached District Tourney Semifinals in 1928.

W. CARTER BAUM, Department of Justice special agent, who was slain yesterday as authorities attempted to capture John Dillinger, notorious outlaw, near Eagle River, Wisc., played a prominent part in Washington tennis circles for many years.

As a member of the Dumbarton Club and George Washington Varsity teams, Baum participated in local tournaments from 1925 to 1928. A great defense player, he ranked among the best in the District despite being a very weak hitter. His uncanny skill in making placement shots and disconcerting opponents with well-placed lobs kept him near the top of the local net ratings during the years he played the game seriously. In 1928 he reached the semi-finals of the District Championships at the Edgemoor Club, Edgemoor, Md., only to bow to Maj. C. C. Van Vliet, whom he had upset in the early rounds of the same tournament two years before.

Upon graduating from George Washington University, Baum practiced law here, abandoning competitive tennis as his practice demanded more and more of his time. He entered the Department of Justice in June, 1930.

Maryland U. Netmen Beat Wash-Lee, 6-3

The University of Maryland defeated Washington and Lee, 6 to 3, at tennis yesterday, winning five out of six singles and one of three doubles matches.

Women Resume Golf Play Today

Beaver Dam Is Expected to Extend Chevy Chase.

Chevy Chase, pace-setter in the District first team matches, is expecting stubborn opposition from Beaver Dam as the ten teams resume their matches at Woodmont Country Club this morning. Chevy Chase and Beaver Dam clash at 9:10.

Chevy Chase is leading Congressional by one point, having a total of 18½ for the two rounds already played. Congressional faces Woodmont at 10:10, and Columbia, which last week pulled into third place with 14½ points, is favored to walk away with Washington Golf and Country Club at 9:50. In other matches Indian Spring meets Army and Navy at 9:30, and Kenwood opposes Manor at 10:30.

The schedule for tomorrow's second team matches follows:

First tee, 9:30, Kenwood vs. Washington; tenth tee, 9:20, Beaver Dam vs. Woodmont; first tee, 9:40, Army and Navy vs. Columbia; tenth tee, 9:40, Manor vs. Indian Spring.

Colonials Win; Second for Griffith

Third and Seventh Inning Attacks Beat Western Maryland, 7-2.

LAYING down a timely and effective barrage of bingles in the third and seventh innings while Cal Griffith kept the enemy at bay from his sharpshooting post, George Washington University yesterday chalked up its third straight victory at Griffith Stadium, a 7-2 triumph over Western Maryland. It was young Griffith's second mound win.

Western Maryland supplied the Colonials with fairly decent competition until the third round when it wobbled slightly. In the seventh G. W.'s savage clubbing put the visitors to rout.

Four in Seventh.

Gene Carnes' three-bagger and Everett Russell's single featured the third-round attack, but in the seventh G. W.'s heavy artillery cut loose with a devastating rain of blows that produced four runs and assured the victory. Fitzgerald opened with a single and came home on Bill Albert's double. Melpolder, who again delivered in the role of pinch-hitter, singled Albert home and then scored on Berg's hit to right. Cal Griffith put the finishing touch to the episode with a drive through Shilling's legs scoring Berg.

Virginia to Have Pair In Penn Relays Friday

Charlottesville, Va., April 23 (AP). University of Virginia is sure of having only two men in the Penn relays—Grover Everett and Capt. George Coles—when the fortieth annual holding of the event takes place at Franklin Field, Philadelphia, next Friday.

What was expected to be a great shuttle relay team folded up when Angus McDonald hurt his ankle.

Grove Hurls Five Innings; 'Arm Fine'

Gives Up but Four Hits as Red Sox Conquer Holy Cross, 6-2.

One of Blows a Homer; Says Not a Single Pitch Hurt Him.

WORCESTER, Mass., April 23 (AP).—Robert Moses Grove's ailing $125,000 pitching arm is strong again and he will soon be taking his regular turn on the mound for the Boston Red Sox.

The American League southpaw tested his arm for the first time since April 7 here today by pitching the first five inning against the Holy Cross College nine in an exhibition game which the Sox won 6-2.

He yielded four hits, one a tremendous home run smash by Ed Moriarty, struck out four, passed one and hit another batsman during his five innings on the hill. He didn't really cut loose until the fifth, however, and said afterward that his arm felt fine and that not a single pitch hurt him.

Welch Hurls For Harris' New Club

25,000 to See First Ball Tossed by Roosevelt, Barring Rain.

Capital Fans Get First Glimpse of Stone, Only New Player.

By Shirley L. Povich.
(Sports Editor, The Post.)

ALONG about 3 o'clock this afternoon, the vanguard of a White House automobile entourage will nose its way into Griffith Stadium, photographers will scurry for points of vantage, President Roosevelt will make his way into a field box ajutting the Nats' dugout, and the start of Washington's opening ball game of the season will be a matter of seconds.

Mr. Roosevelt, with his Presidential pitching arm benefiting from an extra week of rest after the false start of last week, will hold his pose until the photographers give the word, and then will fling a shiny new ball out in the general direction of the playing field where some lucky ball player will grab it as a memoir for the wife and kiddies.

An umpire will yell "let's go," and the Nats will begin playing ball against the Boston Red Sox in the formal unveiling of the big league season in the Capital.

Stewart to Pitch.

The left-handed Walter Stewart, unlike Mr. Roosevelt, a pitcher by profession, will direct the ball towards the yawning mitt of Catcher Moe Berg, and what happens while it is in flight will be the story of the ball game today.

Washington's defending American League champions return to their home heath after a week on the road nursing the wounds of a sorry showing in their first seven games which finds them in seventh place with three victories against four defeats suffered at the hands of the Red Sox and Athletics.

The guest opponents today will be the same Red Sox, the ertswhile perennial doormats of the league, who rose in their new might last week to win Patriot's Day doubleheader from the Nats in Boston when they showed evidence of newfound power.

Showers in Morning.

All the foregoing, however, is dependent upon the whims and fancy of the Weather Man, who holds no sentiment for baseball and who seems inclined to frown on the opening day. Showers are forecast for this morning with the probability that the afternoon will be clear. Ball park officials stated last night, however, that the game will be played if there is no rain at 3 p. m.

Given fair weather, Washington to the number of 25,000 fans is expected to greet the Nats coincident with their first assault on the peanuts, pop and weenies. Tickets held over from last Monday's opening will be honored today with no changing of seats necessary.

Opposing Stewart on the mound is likely to be Johnny Welch, the big right-hander who turned the Nats back in Boston last Thursday with five hits after the Washington Club had pounded his predecessors

Patchpocket Scores Head Victory in Sprint Feature on Havre de Grace Card

Place Award Is Won by Believer

Butter Beans, $13.70, Captures Fifth, With Impeach Second.

In India Delights Long-Shot Players in Sixth, Paying $39.20.

By Walter Haight
(Post Staff Correspondent).

HAVRE DE GRACE RACE TRACK, April 23.—Patchpocket, a gelded son of Cohort and Patchwork, defeated a field of Derby and Preakness eligibles today in the Griffwood, the feature of an ordinary card at this picturesque course. In a finish that appeared to be painted against the green of the infield, Patchpocket was a head in front of Believer, with Moon Glory a like distance off for the show award.

The race was a thriller from start to finish, although the real contest involved only the first three to reach the wire. Moon Glory was first to show in front as the field began the 5½ furlong dash. Believer was close up with Patchpocket a close third. There was no change in the leading group until the quarter pole was reached. At that point, Patchpocket and Believer began to cut down Moon Glory's margin. At the sixteenth pole, the three were all even. In the final drive, however, Tipton managed to whip Patchpocket up on the outside.

Winner Pays $7.20.

After threatening to be the favorite, Patchpocket had to surrender that doubtful honor to Fogbound in the last betting. The C. V. Whitney representative ran like he was in a fog, finishing a well defeated sixth.

Patchpocket brought his backers a return of $7.20 for the usual duece and ran the distance in 1:05 2-5, one-fifth of a second off the track record.

It looked as though the juveniles sent to the post in the first race would be 3-year-olds before the field was sent away. Hannah Anne was the chief cut-up, tossing Jockey Jimmy Hunter. However, the rider was found to be uninjured when he regained his breath in the track hospital. R. Merritt was substituted. With the field away, Nervy Nella and Evangelist battled for the lead on the way to the first turn, with Workman soon going to the front with Evangelist. The colt drew out to a substantial lead entering the stretch and galloped home in front of Canterboy and Back Fence. The winner was the favorite at $6.90 mutuel.

First Winner for Jones.

J. P. Jones saddled his first winner of the year in the second race when Chips, a daughter of Chatterton, led a field of 12 to the wire. Come Seven was a fast-closing second and Black Song, grouped in the field, was third. Merritt, who rode the winner, kept his charge off the pace set by Black Song, but took the lead entering the stretch. Chips tired with the end a few yards away and just lasted to stall off the closing rush of Come Seven. It was the second success for favorite players, Chips paying $5.20.

Bobby Merrit, piloting Red Run, rode his second straight winner, taking the decision from F. Dougherty and Meloy in a stretch duel which found Dancing Mack third. Red Run went to the front at the break and was never headed. Meloy gave the leader a stern battle in the stretch, however. Dancing Mack was an easy third. Bubbler, E. R. Bradley representative, was installed the favorite and ran a miserable race. Red Run was a $13 pay-off.

Butter Beans Scores.

Butter Beans came from far back to take the fifth race from a group of seven claimers competing at a mile and a sixteenth. Bobby Jones brought the veteran home, a length ahead of Impeach, which beat Dawn Child by the same margin for the place. Butter Beans, the handicapper's choice, paid $13.70.

In India, winner of one race in two years, and that a Charles Town, triumphed in the sixth race to pay a $39.20 mutuel. Politen was second and St. Christopher was third. Rishi, which had a long lead going up the back stretch, faded out of the picture in the stretch.

Mrs. Lucinda Burford, Colchester, Ill., has had nothing to eat or drink since early in 1929. Still she suffers neither from hunger nor thirst. Her food she takes directly into her stomach.

Five years ago Mrs. Burford suffered from a throat ailment which made it impossible for her to swallow. A physician operated upon her, making an opening in the wall of the stomach, in the hopes of prolonging her life for a few months. Through this incision food and liquids were passed directly into the stomach. Mrs. Burford thrived on her new method of feeding. She is far more active than the average person of her age. Mrs. Burford is 83 years old.

Very much out of her element, but too busy with her brood to worry over the fact that her nest is within a few steps of one of the busiest intersections in the world, a ruby-throated humming bird is tending her young in the heart of downtown Los Angeles. The nest, strange as it seems, was built on the top of an electric light socket in an alley near Seventh and Figueroa streets.

The nest was discovered by Woodbury College students, who report that she makes daily trips to a flower garden 2 miles away for her food supply.

Dear Al: Havre de Grace, April 23.

The Aberdeen Stakes, scheduled here on Wednesday, promises to be an interesting race. Most of the star juveniles are entered in the contest which has $7,500 added money. There is some doubt, however, about the starting of Gold Buckle, William Ziegle, jr.,'s speedy youngster. Trainer Clyde Phillips says the colt is on the verge of bucking but hopes to have him ready. Incidentally, Gold Buckle is a son of Elastique 2d, a mare which has dropped eleven foals and each has won at least one race. Gold Buckle's win last week kept the record intact. Springsteel is headed for Rockingham this summer where Trainer Irvine hopes to take a stake race or two or three. Two winners for the Bennings boy today. BILL.

First race—Vanda Cerulea will go to the post for the first time tomorrow but I understand she has been well groomed for her debut. Freddy Hopkins has the youngster in charge and he has picked Bobby Jones to do the riding. Lady Sable turned in a fine recent effort, missing by a narrow margin. Mario for the show.

Second race—Wise Money came out of winter retirement to show a world of speed before bowing. Finds virtually the same kind of company today and may earn brackets. Bally Bay will be out for the first time. Range Finder to take care of the others.

Third race—March Step is reported to be a fit one and may break on top from that No. 1 post and keep command all the way. Hunter will ride. Dijonette got nothing at Bowie but may improve enough to take the place. The Hun for the third money.

Fourth race—Irene's Bob had a rough trip in that last out. Previously he scored over a nice field. Appears to have the shade over Black Target and DeValera.

Fifth race Character appears ready to defeat a field of this type. Assigned a heavy impost but is best. That recent race behind Silent Shot was a beaut. Silk Flag and Ilchester for the remainder.

Sixth race—Fabius has been a consistent second runner. However, that last second to Bright Beauty stamps this one as an improved horse. Rock Point will be in the thick of the battle if the track remains fast. Parity for the show.

Seventh race—Little Stokes was over his head in his race here last week. Nicely placed in this. Source Circle won at a $10.60 mutuel last out and may be a stout contender.

Nats to Open Here Against Sox Today

Harris vs. Cronin.

Back to the scene of his former triumphs comes Bucky Harris, the boy wonder who led Washington to its first pennant victory in 1924 and another in 1925, to match managerial wits and stratagems with his successor in the boy wonder field—Joe Cronin, whose maiden effort as manager of the Nats last year resulted in the first pennant since Harris' heydey.

Cronin returns his Nats for the inspection of home fans after a bedraggled excursion into the North where the Washington pitching was pounded to pillar and post and back again by the Red Sox and the Athletics. Not until Al Thomas held the Athletics over the full nine-inning route on Sunday had a Washington pitcher lasted more than six innings.

With Luke Sewell's injured finger threatening to keep him idle for at least another week, the catching duties remain in the capable hands of Moe Berg, who has shown positive signs of emerging from a hitting slump, but every other regular will be available to Manager Cronin.

Stone Only New Nat.

The only new face in the Washington lineup will be the finely-chiseled countenance of Johnny Stone out in right field where he displaced the colorful Goose Goslin, who is now employed by the Tigers. The stream-lined Stone has been a contributing factor in what little success the Nats have enjoyed this season, especially by his superbrilliant fielding.

Back to the scene of his former triumphs also is coming Joe Judge, the venerable first sacker of the Red Sox who did business at first base at Griffith Stadium for 18 years before going to Boston via Brooklyn. Judge is understudying Eddie Morgan at first base for the Sox, but is expected to break into the lineup against right-handed pitching.

On review also will be Bill Werber, the former Washington high school boy, who is now taking Boston fans by storm with his sensational play at shotrstop. Throughout the series in Boston, Werber breathed death and destruction to Washington basehits and Boston critics hail him as the cleverest infielder to grace a Hub diamond since the immortal Everett Scott.

Washington will be getting a look, too, at big Julius Solters, the Boston Club's home run threat who is late of Baltimore and who knocks the ball a proverbial mile when he connects. Big Solters, who plays in left field, won a game from the Nats with a home run over the deep center field fence in Boston in the ninth inning.

Westminster Triumphs.

Westminster, Md., April 23 (Spl.). The local baseball season opened yesterday when the Westminster Athletic Club defeated the Midway nine from Hanover, Pa., 8 to 7.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—EVANGELIST, $6.90, $3.90, $3.10; CANTERBOY, $10.70, $7.40; BACK FENCE, $3.90.

EVANGELIST, away in the first flight and having good speed, raced NERVY NELLA into submission in the first half mile, drew clear when straightened into home stretch and had something in reserve at the end. CANTERBOY, a keen factor from the beginning, held on with good courage when placed to punishment. BACK FENCE, forced to race on the outside, finished gamely under strong urging. NERVY NELLA had nice speed while saving ground. She weakened in the final drive and may have been short. HANNAH ANNE reared and unseated her rider when reaching the starting gate. MERRITT was substituted for J. Hunter. She raced forwardly and had no mishaps. PEKIN was gaining nicely at the finish. GOLDEN DRESS lacked early speed. BUCK LANGHORNE stopped. RIVER ROSE broke slowly and was outrun.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800. For 3-year olds, non-winners 1934. Start good from gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:18. Off at 3:18. Winner, J. P. Jones' ch. f. (3), by Chatterton—Woodpile. Trained by owner. Value to winner, $625; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:22 3-5, 0:47 3-5, 1:13 2-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—CHIPS, $5.20, $3.40, $2.60; COME SEVEN, $6.20, $3.90; BLACK SONG (field), $5.90.

CHIPS, reserve colt the early pace, went to BLACK SONG when ready to take command, began tiring inside the final furlong and had to be hard ridden to withstand COME SEVEN. Latter, prominent in the early stages, closed full of run during the final stages. BLACK SONG had good speed until displaced, tired steadily in the closing furlong. KANAL, on the outside to secure racing room, was unable to menace the leaders seriously in the final drive. INFILLEE, slow to get into her stride, took a wide course in the late stages to finish stoutly. BUNGALOW would not extend herself after breaking swiftly. IMMUNE met with early interference on the inside.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:44. Off at 3:49. Winner, Howe Stable's ch. g. (4), by Canter—Rouzeite. Trained by P. M. Walker. Value to winner, $625; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:23 2-5, 0:47 2-5, 1:12 3-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—RED RUN, $13.00, $8.00, $4.20; MELOY, $6.40, $4.20; DANCING MACK, $8.30.

RED RUN, hustled to the front at once, was steadied along until straightened into the home stretch and, under strong urging, withstood MELBY to come out gradually approaching the finish. MELOY, in closest pursuit of the pacemaker the entire trip, faltered during the closing furlong after making a strong effort. DANCING MACK saved ground while holding a forward position, but was unable to menace the first two. PEACH BUD, slow to get into stride, finished stoutly in the last half mile. ENERGETIC BOY worked his way up slowly, and raced well. VISA went evenly from the start. EMMY FISH had no excuses. BUBBLER broke slowly and was never a factor. He was in trouble during the stretch drive and was being eased nearing the finish. JOBS DIDO unseated his rider and ran into the stable enclosure before the start.

FOURTH RACE—Five and one-half furlongs. Purse, $800; allowances. The Guffwood. For 3-year-olds. Start good from gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:19. Off at 4:22½. Winner, G. W. Osle's blk. g. (3), by Cohort—Patchwork. Trained by owner. Value to winner, $625; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:23, 0:46 3-5, 1:05 2-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—PATCHWORK, $7.20, $4.10, $3.00; BELIEVER, $12.10, $6.70; MOON GLORY, $3.60.

PATCHWORK, rated in close attendance of the early leaders, moved up fast when approaching the home stretch, assumed a brief lead and, holding on willingly, outstayed BELIEVER. Latter, a strong factor early, secured racing room between MOON GLORY and the winner and fought it out stautly. MOON GLORY had nice speed from

Stocks Droop Fraction in Quiet Session

Fresh Auto Labor Troubles Retard Market; Sales 1,126,260 Shares.

New York, April 23 (AP).—Financial markets leaned toward the down side today. Common equities quietly drooped on balance, bringing a small net loss to the averages.

Traders in stocks seemed to have been influenced to some extent by fresh automotive labor difficulties, while rails saw their own employe-management situation no nearer a settlement, and stocks representing both of these major industrial divisions sagged. A number of preferred issues and a handful of miscellaneous specialties, however, found considerable support. Transfers totaled 1,126,260 shares.

Metals became firmer with signature of the copper code and decision of the Senate silver bloc to stand for mandatory white metal legislation. U. S. Smelting rallied 3 points, while Anaconda, International Nickel and American Smelting improved fractionally. Gold stocks were mostly inactive. In motors, Auburn dipped to a new low and Chrysler lost more than a point. Light offerings of Allied Chemical put the price down 2½. U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, Montgomery Ward, Consolidated Gas, New York Central, Pennsylvania and North America were down fractions.

List of Gainers.

Gainers included Twin Cities Rapid Transit common and preferred which responded to news of first-quarter net income in contrast to a loss last year; the senior issue was up more than 9. Pressed Steel Car, Sloss Sheffield, Pere Marquette, Mallinson Silk, Colorado Fuel, Warren Bros. and Worthington Pump preferreds strengthened about 2 to 4. General Asphalt, Coca Cola, Evans Productions, Briggs, Murray and Pennick & Ford common stocks worked against the trend.

Reports on trade were rather cheerful. The steel industry begins the week at 54 per cent of capacity, another post-August high, and a rise of 3.7 points since the beginning of last week. Many companies are actively filling contracts placed by motor car and container makers, and the steel industry looks for still higher levels in the near future as mills turn out specifications against orders given them during the last few weeks by consumers who sought to avoid paying the higher prices.

Trends Contra-Seasonal.

Incidentally, current trends in the steel business are contra-seasonal, for April usually is the beginning of a let-down.

The Federal Reserve Board reported increases for March in industrial production, factory employment and pay rolls, the seasonally adjusted index of manufactures and mineral output showing a 3-point rise for the month. Early returns on last week's freight loadings suggested another increase.

Robey's Review

Finance Economics Business

In Spite of President Roosevelt's Stand Last Saturday It Is Far From Certain That More Will Not Be Done for Silver.

By Ralph West Robey.

It is difficult even yet to know what to make of the conference of President Roosevelt with the silver group last Saturday. At first one was inclined to interpret it as a victory for sound money, or, more accurately, for the present monetary policy of the Administration. As one mulls over the reports of the conference, however, this conclusion becomes less and less certain. In its place grows the conviction that the situation with regard to silver was not changed materially by the conference, that the real fight still is ahead, and that it is by no means certain something more will not be done for this metal.

The main basis for such a view rests on the arguments used by the President. From the point of view of putting an end to the threat of the silver group these arguments left much to be desired. This is true in spite of the fact that unquestionably the President was more outspoken against inflation in this conference than he has been in the case of any other serious proposal. For this, those interested in the financial stability of the country can be thankful. Before the danger of silver inflation definitely is removed, however, a still better fight may well become necessary.

President's Arguments Fall Under Four Heads.

The shortcoming of the President's arguments, at least as given in the press reports, was that they dealt with only the superficial factors involved. His main points, judging by the dispatches, may be summarized under four heads. First, he maintained that the present monetary policy, while not as successful as hoped, is doing fairly well, that addition of silver would throw this policy out of balance, and that, in consequence, no action looking to a greater use of silver should be undertaken at this time.

Second, he held that the volume of silver in the world is unknown, that in this particular it differs materially from the case of gold, and that because of this it is impossible to tell what the result of an experiment would be.

Third, he stressed that any attempt to rehabilitate silver as a primary money should be through international cooperation rather than having this country alone try to raise the value of the metal.

Finally, he argued that all the bills so far proposed for "doing something for silver" have been defective, that the judgement of the silver group has been wrong as to what would happen as a result of a given action, and that before he is willing to accept mandatory legislation a bill must be provided in which he can have confidence as a means of accomplishing the desired ends.

Arguments Do Not Reflect the Lessons of History.

If one studies these arguments it quickly becomes evident that none of them reflects any of the clear lessons taught by monetary history. By and large it is true that we do not know how much silver there is in the world, but as far as that is concerned we do not have anything like complete information about gold, and before the World War we knew almost as little about gold as we do about silver today. It also is true that attempts to raise the price of silver would be easier if undertaken through an extensive international agreement than by us alone. There is little reason to believe, however, that if we established an unlimited Government market for silver at, say, $1.29 an ounce, the price would not rise to that level.

In other words the approach made by President Roosevelt fails to hit at the basic fact that both gold and silver can not be used on a par simultaneously in a monetary system, that we have no shortage of monetary metal in this country, that, in brief, there is no more occasion for the Government to buy silver at $1.29 an ounce than there is for it to buy paving blocks at $10 apiece. It is not a question of how much silver there is, it is simply that we can not put it on a par with gold, or start buying more or less unlimited amounts of it, without wrecking our entire monetary system.

Bond Market Drops Slightly; Securities Up

Utilities Hold Own as Transfers Dwindle to $14,934,000.

New York, April 23 (AP).—The cooling of inflationary enthusiasm apparently acted as a spur to United States Government securities today, but the majority of corporation bonds, perversely, drifted irregularly lower.

Secondary rails and industrials were subjected to some profit-taking. The utilities about held their own.

The trading volume dwindled under realizing and transfers totaled only $14,934,000, par value, compared with $18,344,000 last Friday. The average for 60 domestic corporate issues declined one-tenth of a point.

Turnover of $3,800,000.

There was a turnover of some $3,800,000 in the Federal list, most of which was accounted for by the Treasury 3s, which advanced nine-thirty-seconds of a point to equal their high for the year at 99.29. Other gains in the Government department ranged from one-thirty-second to twenty-two-thirty-seconds of a point.

A new crop of strike troubles in the automotive field did not tend to bolster the market. At the same time, another jump in steel production was a cheerful note, although it was realized that much of this spurt was due to anticipatory buying in order to beat higher prices.

Ignore Drifting Trend.

There were a few issues that ignored the drifting trend. Among these were Pressed Steel Car 5s, up 4¾ points; Otis Steel 6s, up 3½; Rutland Railway 4½s, up 4; Sharon Steel Hoop 5½s, up 3½, and Warren Bros.' 6s, up 2. There was an expanded demand for Utilities Power & Light 5s and 5½s at gains of a point or more.

The more active losers of fractions to around a point included some bonds of Warner Bros. Pictures, U. S. Rubber, Postal Telegraph, Philadelphia Co., Paramount, Studebaker, Frisco, Allegheny Corp., American Water Works, Baltimore & Ohio, Central Pacific, St. Paul, Chicago & North Western, Rock Island, Columbia Gas, Erie, International Hydroelectric, International Paper, Nickel Plate, Morris & Co. and M-K-T.

Foreign obligations were quiet and somewhat mixed. Several of the Germans rallied moderately, and some loans of Dutch East Indies, Nord Railways, Uruguay and Upper Austria advanced 2 to 3 points. On the other hand, bonds of Argentina, North German-Lloyd, Leipsic City, Japan, Brazil and Buenos Aires were off 1 to 2 of more.

Silk Markets.

New York, April 23 (A.P.).—Raw silk futures closed barely steady, unchanged to 2 lower; sales, 1,930 bales; *May, 1.24½; *July, 1.26; *October, 1.21½.

Open market quotations (60-day basis): Shanghai steam filature, 78 per cent, serilane 20-22s, 1.35; Canton double extra A, 14-16s, 0.95; Japanese special crack double extra, 81 per cent, seriplane 13-15s, 1.34. *Bid.

Curb's Prices Close Listless; Metals Steady

Utilities Change Little as Oil Issues Fall; Sales, 219,000 Shares.

New York, April 23 (AP).—Metal stocks finished steady to firm on the Curb Exchange today, but other divisions eased in dull and listless dealings. Few declines exceeded a point, however.

American Gas & Electric lost a half point. Electric Bond & Share common showed a similar decline, but its preferred issues closed moderately higher. Other public utility stocks were without much change.

Lake Shore Mines rose 2 points in a fair turnover. Prices were steady to fractions higher in Newmont, Hollinger Gold, Wright Hargreaves and Pioneer Gold.

U. S. Foil B was a firm spot, but losses of major fractions to around a point were recorded by Gulf Oil, Hiram Walker, Waco Aircraft, Swift International, A. O. Smith, Sherwin Williams, Atlas Corporation and Glen Alden Coal. General Tire & Rubber yielded nearly 2.

Transfers declined to approximately 219,000 shares, compared with 346,000 last Friday.

Goods Markets.

New York, April 23 (A.P.).—Cotton goods markets continue quiet, but sellers of finished goods anticipate more activity on sheer novelties as "cotton week" nears. Labor difficulties continue to disturb the rayon market with producers unwilling to accept orders for May delivery until they know how they stand on wages for that month. Raw silk prices are unchanged, despite the firmer tone in the uptown market. Silk greige goods are off ½ cent to 2 cents a yard. Sheers are leading finished goods sales. Both wool goods and burlaps continue inactive.

London—With home and foreign politics wielding a restrictive influence, business on the stock exchange was quiet today. Rubber shares, gilt-edged securities and motor shares were supported and reached firmer levels. Profit taking in other sections caused an irregular closing.

Paris—The new jump in rentes monopolized attention in the bourse, the 4½ per cent issue gaining more than 2 francs. Marked by weakness in Citroen shares and the drop in Rio Tintos on troubles in Spain, the remainder of the market was inactive and barely steady. The closing was irregular, with rentes firm and industrials heavy.

Berlin—In view of the coming transfer conference, prices on the boerse sagged. The market closed unrecovered.

Cotton Prices Decline Under Liquidation

May Closes at 11.47 as General Market Falls 8 to 12 Points.

New York, April 23 (AP).—Except for further evening-up of May contracts in preparation for possible delivery notices on Wednesday, trading in cotton was quiet today with prices lower under liquidation and scattered selling.

July ranged from 11.61 down to 11.57, closing at that figure with the general market finishing steady at net declines of 8 to 12 points.

Opening prices were 9 to 12 points lower in response to relatively easy Liverpool cables. May liquidation was fairly heavy and there was some Southern and New Orleans selling. Offerings were taken by trade buying, while there also seemed to be a moderate demand through some houses with foreign connections.

Prices Move Up.

This proved sufficient to steady the market after the call and prices worked up 3 or 4 points from the lowest during the morning. No aggresive buying interest developed, however, and later fluctuations were narrow and irregular, with the May liquidation, or switching into later deliveries, the chief trading feature.

May sold off to 11.45 in the late trading while October declined to 11.70 and closing quotations were within 2 or 3 points of the lowest on most positions.

A little selling was reported early on reports of favorable weather in the South over Sunday, and according to some observers, there may have been a little further liquidation of inflationist traders on weekend reports regarding the attitude of the Administration toward mandatory legislation of that character, or on the easier ruling of foreign exchange.

Houses with Japanese connections were again credited with buying here to fix prices while there seemed to be small orders on both sides of the market.

Exports today, 7,521, making 6,430,999 so far this season. Port receipts, 17,187. U. S. port stocks, 3,048,719.

Cottonseed Oil.

Bleachable cottonseed oil was quiet and irregular today, with the near months a little easier under liquidation promoted by the easiness of cotton and lard, while late months held steady on further covering and commission house buying. Final prices were 1 lower to 3 net higher. Sales were 28 contracts. Bleachable spot, nominal; May, closed 5.24; July, 5.45; September,

Steel Demand Continues to Gain Volume

Uptrend Is Aided by Larger Auto Shipments and Sales to Railways.

Cleveland, April 23.—Steel demand continues to gain momentum, not only from the expediency of consumers' price advantage, but also from actual acceleration in consumption, states the magazine Steel.

Supporting a four-point rise to 55 per cent in the national steelworks operating rate last week—highest since last July—were heavier shipments to automobile manufacturers, whose production schedules are mounting; a larger volume of buying by railroads and equipment makers; broader structural steel and miscellaneous manufacturing activity. Strikes in the automobile industry are losing force, and the belief is growing that rational labor policies will predominate in Washington.

It is becoming more evident that if all the steel tonnage contracted for prior to recent price advances is delivered before July 1, as the steel code prescribes and as consumers apparently desire, steel output must for some time show a steady upward movement.

With some fears that delivery may become a problem, steelmakers are urging users to cooperate by releasing material as early as possible; as a result of which leading consumers are beginning to issue specifications for June.

Adjustments of Prices.

This week price adjustments to the higher levels will be practically completed, with steel pipe announced for an advance of $6 to $7 a ton; reinforcing bars, $3, in addition to those previously noted in Steel. Contracting began to subside last week, and the industry's chief concern now is to insure a steady flow of shipments to avoid complications in June. Some producers have withdrawn from the market for the present on cold-rolled sheets, strip and bars.

This demand for steel is reflected in increased production of pig iron and preparations for lighting additional blast furnaces. Lake furnace interests have more tonnage on their books than at any time since the beginning of the depression, and expect shipments this month will be double those of March. Steelmakers themselves covered for heavy tonnages of scrap, and with the beginning of water transportation the tone of the scrap market is easier.

Railroads placed approximately 65,000 tons of rails and fastenings, including 25,000 tons of rails and 10,000 tons of fastenings for the New York, New Haven & Hartford; 10,000 tons of rails for Norfolk & Western; 12,000 tons of fastenings for Chesapeake & Ohio and Nickel Plate; 4,200 tons of rails for the Maine Central, and a release of 3,700 tons of rails by the Nickel Plate on a former contract.

1,000 Tons of Car Wheels.

New York Central purchased 1,000 tons of car wheels; Wheeling & Lake Erie, 1,000 tons of plates and shapes, while Great Northern is inquiring for 6,500 tons of steel for car repairs.

Featuring the market for structural shapes is the larger number of small awards, amounting for the week to 13,665 tons. March bookings were the heaviest of any month this year, and tonnage now on books for fabrication is estimated as 13 per cent larger than at this time last year. St. Louis has awarded 10,000 tons of plates for a water pipe line; 13,000 tons of plates are on inquiry for gas holders in various cities.

The Navy is preparing specifications for one heavy and three light cruisers, which will require a substantial tonnage of plates and shapes; the Navy also has awarded 500 tons of stainless steel, one of the largest orders for this material ever placed.

Operations Rise 4 Points.

Last week steelworks operations rose 4 points to 43 per cent at Pittsburgh; 4 to 54, Chicago; 12 to 94, Detroit; 11 to 89, New England; 7 to 57, Buffalo; 5 to 74, Cleveland; 4 to 73, Wheeling; 1½ to 40, eastern Pennsylvania; and 3 to 60 per cent, Youngstown. Birmingham remained at 52 per cent. The Pittsburgh rate is scheduled for 45 per cent this week.

Steel's London cable states that through reorganization of the British Iron and Steel Federation a continuation of the 33 1-3 per cent import duties is assured, pending further steps in accord with the Government's plan for aiding the industry.

Pending further price advances to take effect this week, Steel's iron and steel price composite remains $34.77. Due to a counter filing on plain wire, effective April 20, which reduced the amount of the previous advance, the finished steel composite is adjusted to $54.80, while the scrap index remains $12.21.

Railways Drop 3,328 Miles Of Lines in U.S.

St. Louis, Mo., April 23.—"There were 3,328 miles of railroad abandoned in the United States in the years 1932 and 1933, which is more than the total mileage in any one of 13 of the 48 States in the Nation," said C. D. Morris, assistant to the chairman of the Western Railways' committee on public relations, Chicago, in an address before the Missouri Pacific Club here this evening.

"This means," continued the speaker, "that a large number of communities throughout the country have been robbed of transportation facilities upon which they were accustomed to depend, that thousands of railroad men have been thrown out of employment, and that the revenues of these communities for governmental and school purposes received from railroad taxation have been permanently reduced and the taxes of private citizens have been made higher than they otherwise would be to meet the situation.

"In 1933 alone the abandonment of rail mileage aggregated 1,876 miles, more than half of which, or 1,022 miles, was in our Western States. "The mileage abandoned in the entire country in 1933 was equal to the total abandonment during the three years, 1926, 1927 and 1928, and was greater than the mileage abandoned in any one year in history prior to 1932, except in the single year 1921.

The situation with respect to abandonment has been most acute in the Western States particularly in those localities where the population is light and the opportunity and need for development is most apparent."

'Tis a Wonder That Only Two Were Hurt

All that is left of an Army bombing plane after it crashed at the Hopewell, Va., municipal airport on a flight from Langley Field to Roanoke. Two enlisted men, passengers in the plane, were injured. The pilot and copilot, both officers, and another passenger were not hurt. Failure of one of the motors is blamed.

To Connecticut.

Some States are famed for mines or oil
Or for their bumper crops,
And some for lakes, for ranches, trees
Or snow-capped mountain tops,
But here's a State whose fame is great
As history well shows;
Who played her part right from the start
And record brightly glows.
She's famed for valleys—Berkshire
Hills;
For good roads running through,
For mills, for shops, tobacco crops.
And Yale — the world-famed "Blue,"
So well may native sons take pride—
(If we were one we'd strut)—
For there is reason to be proud
Of old Connecticut.

A typical young couple of Connecticut. Brien McMahon, of Norwalk, is special assistant to the Attorney General, an exceptionally high position for his age. A good scholastic record at Fordham and Yale and private law practice have made him well qualified. Miss Virginia Lang, of New Haven, is the daughter of E. J. Lang, Postoffice, who is president of the State society. Miss Lang is a talented pianist. She represented the State at the Legion pageant last year.

THIS date is one of the most important in Connecticut history. On April 22, 1662, the charter of Connecticut was granted the colony by Charles II and validated the following month. It is now the State's most precious relic.

The charter was issued in duplicate. One was accidentally mutilated about 1817 to form the lining of a lady's bonnet. About two-thirds of the second of the two parchment sheets upon which it was written remains. This fragment, together with the small portions of the green wax seal from one of the charters, are now in the custody of the Connecticut Historical Society at Hartford. The other charter, written on three sheets of parchment and lacking only the seal, is preserved in the State Library and Supreme Court Building at Hartford.

Connecticut, with a population of 1,630,000, is a manufacturing State. Its products are builders' hardware, typewriters, locks, watches, clocks and rubber goods and tobacco.

Hartford, the capital, is a beautiful city on the Connecticut River, with a population of 167,900. This is a great insurance center. The rose gardens at Elizabeth City are well known.

New Haven, the next largest city, known for its beautiful trees, has a population of 162,700. Yale University is located here.

Many quaint old towns nestle along Long Island Sound shores, which provide excellent bathing beaches for beautiful homes and summer resorts.

Bridgeport, New Britain and Waterbury are other manufacturing cities through which one passes through Naugatuck Valley to the Berkshire Hills.

Litchfield county, in the Berkshire foothills, is noted for its scenery. To the southwest lies Bantam Lake, largest in the State. In the eastern party of the county are the manufacturing cities of Winsted and Torrington. In the latter are the extensive mills of the American Brass Co. Thomaston is famous for its watches and clocks. In nearby Terryville lived Eli Terry, who invented the first clocks with wooden works. Salisbury was an early iron works center, and it was here the huge iron cable was made which was stretched across the Hudson River in Revolutionary days to prevent Gen. Howe's fleet from reaching West Point.

The gem of towns is Litchfield, called "the most beautiful town in the United States." Many of the houses were built between 1750 and 1800 and are still in perfect condition, some owned by descendants of their original builders.

The Oliver Wolcott house was built in 1753. It was in the orchard back of this house where the leaden statue of King George III, pulled from its pedestal on Bowling Green, New York City, was melted and poured into bullets by the patriotic young townspeople. Sheldon's Tavern, as it was called in Revolutionary days, shows the beautiful architecture of one of North street's houses dated 1760. Here Washington stayed on one of his visits to Litchfield. Harriet Beecher Stowe and Henry Ward Beecher were born here.

Besides its great natural beauty, Litchfield is the home of the first law school in America. The house was built in 1773 by Tapping Reeve, of Princeton College. Here he brought his bride, Sally Burr, sister of Aaron Burr, and began the practice of law, having several students. By 1784 the number had so increased that Reeve put up a one-story building on the lawn. Students entered from all parts of the Nation, a large number coming from the South. Among these were John C. Calhoun and John M. Clayton, both of whom became Secretary of State.

An outstanding woman executive in the Government is Miss Katherine C. Blackburn, of Haddam, director of Press Intelligence. Miss Blackburn entered the service a year ago as special assistant to the Assistant Secretary of State. She attended the London Economic conference.

Nova Scotia Steel Industry Prospers

Conditions Reported Best in Past 3 Years as Activity Jumps.

The steel industry of Nova Scotia is reported to be in a better position than at any time during the last three years with employment recorded at the highest point since the autumn of 1931, according to advices to the Commerce Department from Assistant Trade Commissioner A. V. Peterson, Ottawa.

Steel anufacturing activity in the Cape Breton district was markedly stimulated at the end of the first quarter by the receipt of export orders for 24,000 tons of soft steel products from English and New Zealand buyers. In addition, a Canadian Pacific Railway order for 3,800 tons of slow-cooled 85-pound rails was secured in the domestic market.

During March the reopening of the rail mill increased employment from 1,700 workers to 2,000, and in April it was reported that operations warranted employment of 200 additional workers. The blast furnace is still idle, but the wire, nail, rod and blownin mills are on steady schedule. Approximately 26,000 tons of "relief" rail orders for the Canadian National Railways remain to be rolled.

Motor-Car Sales In Japan Advance

Tokyo Registrations Climb in '33; Outlook for '34 Bright.

The marked improvement of both industry and commerce in Japan during the fourth quarter of 1933 was increasingly favorable to the sale of motor vehicles, particularly the commercial type.

The total volume of motor vehicle sales in the quarter increased 50 per cent over the preceding quarter and was substantially larger than in the first two quarters of 1933. New registrations in Tokyo during the last 3 months totaled 1,246, an increase of 529 (73 per cent) over the preceding quarter.

The outlook for the first quarter of 1934 is extremely encouraging, though the volume of business will depend to a great extent on the ability of distributors to secure sufficient cars to meet the demand. In spite of the shortage, sales of low-priced passenger cars and trucks are expected to double the corresponding period of 1933, when business was poor.

Walt Mason, Himself

Ambrose Bierce.

Investigators cannot pierce the mystery of Ambrose Bierce, who left accustomed haunts one day, and to the darkness walked away. He was successful in his game, and loaded down with wreaths of fame, and one would think he would have yearned to hang around where insense burned, with rapt admirers on his trail, to cheer his every printed tale. Perhaps he thought, "This fame will pass, for fame, like flesh, is merely grass, unless I pull some noble stunt to keep it always at the front. What can I do for my renown, so it will never simmer down?" Whatever may have been his plan, he walked from the abodes of man and lost himself as Villon did, and who is there to lift the lid from this great problem that defies the best researches of the wise? New books are written by the tierce about the missing Ambrose Bierce; each week new theories are disclosed, new explanations are proposed, and legends multiply each day about the man who walked away. Great authors well might take the hint, and when they're booming most in print, pack up their grips and disappear, and leave folks guessing by the year; their fame would then be bolstered well by all such legends as men tell of Ambrose Bierce, who left his desk, to find a finish picturesque.
